SUPER COW!

OTTAWA (CP) — It sounded like bull to some opposition members when Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan boasted in the Commons Friday that Canadian cows are "the super cows of the world."

"Super bull," snapped Gordon Fairweather (PC Fundy Royal).

"It is a matter of fact and the whole world knows it and I cannot understand why honorable members opposite do not, that we do have super bulls," said Whelan.

"We've got one," said the unimpressed Fairweather.

Whelan said his department's breeding program "has made the Canadian cow, especially the Canadian Holstein cow, the super cow of the world."

Optimistic Stock Jump In U.K.

LONDON (FP) — The stock exchange took a phenomenal jump in share prices Friday sparked by new confidence that the ruling Labor government can beat inflation.

An amazing $4 billion was added to share values as heavy buying by institutional investors sent the Financial Times index up by 19.9 points in one day to 217.

This means that the stock market has gone from a rock-bottom 146 points on Jan. 6 to 217 in 14 days. The last time the index moved from 146 to over 200 was in 1954—and it took 15 months.

There were several factors causing the surge in confidence, including:

—Two bank rate cuts by the Bank of England;

—Delayed but positive business reaction to tough speeches by the prime minister and the chancellor of the exchequer warning the country to pull its belt in;

—Government axing of the multi-billion-dollar channel tunnel project with a resulting easing of strain on future capital markets;

—Firm public advice to unions not to base pay claims on expected price increases, delivered by Len Murray, general secretary of the powerful Trade Union Congress;

—Ending of uncertainty over the Common Market issue by the prime minister's announcement of a referendum before the end of June;

—Growing hope that Ulster terrorism may be approaching its end.

Markets also rallied in North America.

Gold shares recorded some of their sharpest gains in more than two weeks on the Toronto Stock Exchange, while in New York the market reached its highest closing level since early November, with a broad rally stimulated by more cuts in the U.S. bank prime lending rate.

In Toronto, the gold index jumped 22.99 to 383.15, responding to a rebound in the bullion price on overseas markets.

The TSE industrials index gained 2.11 to 175.80, highest since Aug. 21 last.

On the New York Stock Exchange, the Dow Jones industrial average rose 9.85 to 666.61, extending its gain for the week to 21.98 points.

Extortion Gangs Busy in Vancouver

VANCOUVER (CP) — Extortion gangs of Chinese teenagers are intimidating high school students and in some instances have barged into schools to rough up non-paying victims, according to the Vancouver Sun.

The gangs have picked almost entirely on Chinese youths who police say are afraid to inform authorities about the incidents.

Two separate gangs with seven or eight members in each are known to police. They apparently got their tactics and some of their members from young Chinese extortion gangs operating in San Francisco and Seattle.

On Friday four young men were charged with kidnapping and robbery after a Vancouver youth was taken "for a ride" through Stanley Park to extort $200 from him.

Police said Tsun Wong was forced into a car Tuesday and intimidated into withdrawing $200 from his bank.

Man Kam, Ha Cham Tom, Kai Sun Szeto and Larry Mo Yip have been charged.

In an interview with the Sun, Inspector John Page said information about the gangs is sparse and is based on rumor or on conversations with a few victims who have agreed to speak out.

"But for the most part the victims are afraid of retaliation," said Insp. Page.

He said the ideal victims, called "visa boys" by the gangs, are newly arrived immigrants ignorant of immigration laws.

The gangs set up a victim on a sidewalk and bump into him. The "visa boy" is told he has insulted the gang's honor and must pay for it.

Sometimes the victim is ordered to pay $20 or more to the gang, said Insp. Page. Other times he is told to buy the gang a dinner or get beaten up.

He said no one has been seriously hurt, but several young people have been assaulted — at least one in the cafeteria of an east end high school.

Miners Seek Lunch-Hour Sex Break

SUVA, Fiji (Reuter) — Gold miners are seeking a 30-minute mid-day sex break.

The miners say this is the best time for sex, their union secretary, Navita Ragona, said Friday.

The demand is one of the number of issues the 1,600-strong union is discussing with a mining company.

Ragona said a man has a sexual obligation to his wife, and if he goes home exhausted at 5 p.m., he cannot fulfil his duty.

The union wants the sex break added to the normal lunch break.

The union proposes to limit the sex break to married men.

"Alternative arrangements" would have to be made to compensate bachelors, said Ragona.

No School Cuts—Dailly

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

B.C. school boards have been told they will not have to cut back on staffing or educational programs this year despite rapidly inflating costs.

Education Minister Eileen Dailly said today boards should try to maintain existing programs in 1975 and the provincial government will "make every effort" to ensure that no district suffers from dramatic increases in mill rates.

In a speech to the northern branch of the B.C. Schools Trustees Association, Dailly said "the government and the boards collectively are going to be very hard pressed to continue to meet the kind of educational programs that have been developing over the last two years."

Local mill rates must increase to meet inflationary increases in school costs, she said, but the government "is committed to finding every possible dollar that it can to assist the boards to meet their budget needs in 1975."

Dailly said there would be some kind of averaging formula applied to school mill rate increases experienced across the province to ensure that no one district suffers high increases in mill rates.

If all districts maintain their existing programs, their existing student-teacher ratios and budget only for additional programs that are "absolutely necessary", the province will provide supplementary grants to ensure that no district is forced to raise its mill

BITTER VOTE FORECAST

The next provincial election will be the most bitter political fight the province has ever seen says Premier David Barrett in a wide-ranging interview with Times editor George Oake on page four today. Conversation focused on the personal rather than the political and Barrett talks about his philosophy, faults and the lack of reason in North American politics.

Paralyzed Youth Wins $1.5M Suit

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Gary Thornton, 19, of Prince George, whose neck was broken in a school gymnasium accident in 1971, was awarded $1.5 million damages Friday.

Lawyers said the award was the highest personal damage award ever made in the Commonwealth.

Prince George School District, which must pay the sum, carries only $1 million liability insurance.

Mac Carpenter, board secretary-treasurer, said he did not know how the board would find the $534,058 balance of the award.

The settlement was also against David Edamura, who was the teacher in charge of the class at the time of the accident.

In a written judgment, Mr. Justice Douglas Andrews of the B.C. supreme court assessed the damages against the school district and Edamura. The judge dismissed the action against John Harrower, the school's principal.

Don Andrews, one of the counsel arguing for the complainant, said the damages were claimed on the basis of $4,200 expenses a month for a 50-year life expectancy.

Mr. Justice Andrews said the youth was entitled to substantial damages because of his total disability and complete reliance on others for physical needs.

Gary Thornton is now a patient at Grandview Auxiliary Hospital in Edmonton — a rehabilitation centre. As a result of the accident in Prince George he is paralyzed in all four limbs.

In his decision Friday, Mr. Justice Andrews explained the youth was injured while attempting to somersault from a springboard to a layer of foam chunks. He said the teacher should not have permitted the students to use a box horse for that purpose.

FIREMEN RESCUE injured from a building struck by a powerful fragmentation bomb in New York's business district Friday afternoon. The bomb, believed to have been placed by a Puerto Rican nationalist group, killed four persons and injured at least 42 others.

U.S. Planning Firm Oil Stand With Canada

WASHINGTON — The U.S. plans to engage in "strong bargaining" with Canada on a broad range of energy issues, according to Washington Senator Warren Magnuson.

Magnuson said Friday he received this promise from two senior U.S. government officials after he complained that the U.S. was dealing with Canada on an ad hoc basis.

The two officials were Thomas Enders, assistant secretary of state for economic and business affairs, and Mel Conant, assistant administrator for international affairs at the federal energy administration.

Magnuson said he summoned the two to his Senate office to explain reports that Puget Sound refineries would be the first cut off from Canadian crude oil as Canada reduces its exports.

Magnuson feared that such a cutoff would mean an increase in tanker shipments to replace the Canadian oil. At present, Washington state gets 176,000 barrels of Canadian oil each day, although its refinery capacity was 330,000 barrels a day, he said.

"I was concerned that the federal officials did not understand the environmental consequences of such a decision," Magnuson said.

However, the two federal officials assured him that no decision has been made on allocating dwindling supplies of Canadian oil across the U.S.

Both Magnuson and Sen. Henry Jackson are also concerned that the Midwestern states would get preferential treatment in allocations.

"The federal officials assured me that the environmental interests of the Northwest would be carefully weighed," Magnuson said after his meeting.

One suggestion, he said, was the Midwest could be supplied by oil moved up from the Gulf of Mexico.

At present, allocation of export supplies to various U.S. regions is handled by Canada. But there have been two meetings, with a third planned, on turning over the allocation process to the U.S. because of the red tape involved. It is understood that Canada would be quite happy to do this.

However, the U.S. has not decided what to do.

BAND STRUCK A CZAR NOTE

PORTO ALEGRE (Reuter) — The military guard of honor in southern Brazil has hit the wrong note again, this time playing the Czarist national anthem in honor of the Soviet ambassador.

Four months ago a band played the West German national anthem in honor of the East German ambassador.

A member of the Soviet ambassador's entourage interrupted the baton-swinging major to tell him that the Czar was overthrown 57 years ago.

Olympic Talks

MONTREAL (CP)—The Star says Lord Killanin and the executive of the International Olympic Committee (IOC) have asked Montreal officials of the 1976 Summer Games to appear at an emergency meeting in Amsterdam on Monday "with answers" to questions about construction schedules.

CNR Suing

TORONTO (CP) — Canadian National Railways (CNR) freight and passenger service from Ontario to British Columbia remained severely curtailed today as CNR began serving writs for damages on 2,000 locomotive engineers who it says are striking illegally.

11 Die at Sea

PENZANCE, England (AP) — Eleven crew members died today when the British freighter Lovat sank in a howling gale 15 miles off the rocky southwest tip of England, police said. The Royal Air Force rescue centre said there were only two survivors.

Gaza Violence

TEL AVIV (AP)— Israeli soldiers shot and wounded an Arab boy and girl in the occupied Gaza Strip today following a grenade attack that missed the troops but set their jeep ablaze, the Israeli military command said. It was the worst incident in Gaza in nearly two years.

Gas Service Cut

MONTREAL (CP) — About 200 gas repairmen from Toronto and Ottawa were flown here early today in an attempt to restore gas service to 15,000 customers following a refusal by local repair crews to work overtime. A Gaz Metropolitan Inc. spokesman said a main valve regulating the gas flow to several west-end districts was deliberately turned off.

No Scrutiny for CIDA: PM

By RON CLINGEN
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Prime Minister Trudeau says he has no intention of placing the Canadian International Development Agency in a position where it's spending would be subjected to regular scrutiny in the Commons.

A suggestion by Conservative external affairs critic Claude Wagner that the government agency be given departmental status brought a terse "no" from the PM in the Commons Friday.

The Ottawa Journal, in a series of copyrighted articles which began Thursday, claimed the Canadian aid agency is scrambling to spend $117 million left in its budget before the fiscal year ends in three months.

Wanger had insisted many of the "numerous allegations" concerning the operation, policies and direction of CIDA "demand immediate answers."

The MP for the Quebec riding of Ste. Hyacinthe claimed "we have only seen the tip" of allegations against CIDA.

B.C. Residents Hurt by Boat Tax—MP

Times News Services

OTTAWA — A government bill to authorize higher taxes on motorboats and private aircraft came under attack from all sides of the Commons Friday.

Progressive Conservatives and New Democrats, joined by Liberal Hugh Anderson (Comox-Alberni), called the taxes discriminatory measures likely to increase unemployment and hamper transportation, especially in the North.

Anderson said the proposed tax, provided for in Turner's Nov. 18 budget, is detrimental to residents of B.C. who have to rely on small boats and aircraft for transportation to and from their communities.

He also charged that the tax would be detrimental to the boat-building industry on the West Coast and in other parts of Canada.

Anderson said that on the northern part of Vancouver Island, small boats and aircraft are often the only means of transportation available in an area already suffering from high costs due to its inaccessibility.

He said he knows that the provincial government in Victoria is not interested in the question of transportation on northern Vancouver Island, and that he is sure Turner doesn't share this attitude of the Barrett government.

The MP read a number of letters from his constituents protesting against the proposed 10 per cent additional tax on pleasure craft over 20 horse power.

He said the measure will discourage marine sales by increasing price to the consumer by 20 per cent over last year's prices, and that this will lead to unemployment in the local industry at both the manufacturers' and retail level.

Some of the letters charged that the tax is discriminatory in that it will effect mainly residents of communities on the east and west coasts of Canada.

Anderson also pointed out that many boats and planes had been ordered before Nov. 18 when the tax would become effective. He asked the finance minister to ensure, if he goes ahead with the tax, that it won't apply to boats and planes ordered before the effective date, but not delivered until later.

"It is an injustice to have ordered under one set of figures and have an item delivered under another," he said.

The Vancouver Island MP pointed out that most of the aircraft used in northern B.C. and the Island are single engine aircraft or other small planes falling under the special tax category.

"They play an important part in the economy of our

Oil Producers Eye Summit With Users

Times News Services

ALGIERS—The world's major oil producing countries met today to decide whether to hold summit talks with the United states and other industrial powers whose economies have been hit hard by massive oil price rises.

Iran Interior Minister Jamshid Amouzegar indicated the 13-member Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries is leaning toward an American proposal for a summit between the producers and the major industrial powers, probably to be held in late June or early July. The developing countries would be left out of first contacts but brought in later.

Before the conference of finance, oil and development ministers of OPEC countries began its second day, Saudi Arabian Oil Minister Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani said: "Today we begin substantive talks. We cannot set a date for a sumit until we have decided to hold one."

Amouzegar said after Friday's talks, "when you have a problem to solve, the fewer involved the better.

Their meeting Friday opened on a defensive note, with speaker calling on the oil producers to stand firm before what they called an American strategy of confrontation and threats.

Abdel Aziz Bouteflina, foreign minister of host country Algeria, warned the ministers of foreign affairs, petroleum and finance that Western countries were preparing "an act of aggression" being instigated by the United States.

Bouteflina, elected chairman of the conference, and Algeria's state-controlled media hammered hard on the theme that the U.S. was behind "a deliberately hostile campaign" aimed at breaking the oil cartel's unified position, which has driven crude-oil prices up 400 per cent in 18 months.

In another development Yamani told newsmen that Saudi Arabia and the four American oil companies operating there were close to signing an agreement that calls for a 100 per cent turnover of Western oil interests there to the government.

Saudi sources said that the nationalization of the giant Arabian American Oil Co. would probably be completed in February, and that the four American owners of Aramco would receive a guaranteed profit of about 25 cents on each barrel of oil produced by Aramco.

The American owners of Aramco, which produces 8.5 million barrels of oil a day, are Exxon, Mobil, Texaco and Standard Oil of California. Saudi Arabia currently owns 60 per cent of Aramco.

Foreign and finance ministers of the OPEC countries, which produce 80 per cent of the world's oil exports, joined the oil ministers for the first time in an OPEC meeting. They gathered at the modernistic Club des Pins beach resort complex 15 miles outside of Algiers.

PUTTING TEETH IN THE LAW...

VANCOUVER (CP) — A man who was checked for impaired driving Thursday night apparently bit the hand that tried to arrest him and sent the constable to hospital for a tetanus shot.

The man also was taken to hospital where his lip, cut in a scuffle with police, was stitched.

Police said they found the man slumped over the wheel of his truck with the motor going in a central area of the city.

"Oh, it's you guys again," constables heard the man say as they opened the truck door.

The man apparently stumbled from the truck and, while he was being arrested, apparently sank his teeth into the right hand of Constable G. Dalton.

Charged with assaulting a constable and having care and control of a motor vehicle while intoxicated was William Marcel Alexander, 45, of Vancouver.

country," he declared, and added that the tax will increase transportation costs in northern areas where costs already are high.

"I must protest very strongly . . . regarding the proposed additional 10 per cent excise tax on boats and aircraft," Anderson said.

He called on Turner to reconsider the measure since "this tax is not required and is in effect harmful to Canadians and Canadian industry."

Opposition Leader Robert Stanfield criticized the government for introducing isolated measures designed to conserve fuel before bringing forth an over-all energy conservation program.

Stanfield, claiming it is difficult to vote on isolated measures, said that lighting and heating of government offices make it obvious the government is not seriously trying to conserve energy.

Finance Minister John Turner retorted that "a start has to be made somewhere."

Stan Darling (PC—Parry Soung-Muskoka) said the boat tax would cause unemployment in his vacation-area constituency that would outweight any advantage from the $30-million revenue it is supposed to generate.

SLITHERING TRAFFIC snarled the streets of Winnipeg this morning as temperatures rose to near the freezing point after seven-and-a-half inches of snow fell overnight. Winds gusting to 30 m.p.h. caused the damp snow to drift at intersections, forcing the closure of many roads. This picture was taken on Portage Avenue just after the storm started Friday afternoon.

Tenants Have More Fun

OTTAWA (CP) — Rejoice, tenants! Be glad you don't own a house — you have more time for fun.

Mike Heit, a research officer for the Ontario community services department, told the Ontario Recreation Society Thursday that freedom from household maintenance means that tenants have more leisure time and participate in more activities than homeowners.

He said a government survey shows that tenants have 12.4 hours of leisure time a week available compared with 11 hours weekly for homeowners.

The survey of 10,200 people over the age of 12 also showed that tenants participated in 13.9 separate recreational activities every year compared with 13.3 for those living in family-owned houses.

"We're trying to counter this idea that a guy is screwed if he does not own his own house," Heit said in an interview.

"In fact, tenants don't have it that bad. They are the freest and most active people."

Extortion Remand

A 21-year-old Duncan man has been remanded in custody to Monday following his appearance before Judge P. Bowen-Colthurst in Duncan provincial court Friday charged with attempted extortion.

Terrence Michael Pitcher, 6355 Fairview Place, is charged in connection with an incident Thursday when a man telephoned Cobble Hill resident Mrs. Mary Turner at 12:30 p.m. and told her to deliver $10,000 to a designated location by 4 p.m.

The caller said if she didn't do as he said her son David, 22, a student at the B.C. Institute of Technology in Burnaby, would be killed.

Mrs Turner contacted police and subsequent to an investigation by Duncan and Colwood RCMP, Pitcher was arrested in his home later in the evening.

rates higher than the provincial average.

A departmental official said some rapidly-growing districts have complained that even to maintain their programs rates would increase as much as 14 mills.

School boards' final budgets must be submitted to the government by Feb. 15 and average mill rate increases will not be known until that time. Until those budgets are handed in, the government also has no idea how much money will have to be given out in supplementary grants.

Last year the government provided $21 million in special grants and said the money was to be directed at lowering the student-teacher ratio across the province. The goal, which was apparently met last year, was to decrease the ratio by 1.5 every year for three years to bring it down to 17-1.

While there will be no special grants given this year to continue decreasing the ratio, Dailly said by maintaining existing staffing levels many districts with declining enrolments will find the student-teacher ratio continuing to decline.

In her speech, the minister made veiled reference to the recent firing of research and development director Dr. Stanley Knight and hinted that Knight's special division may have been trying to enact policy on its own.

The express purpose of the new division, set up by Knight, hired in July, was to provide accurate information and research on which to base educttional change, she said, stressing however that "the responsibility for enacting policy remains with elected officials."

"Therefore, at no time can I, as minister, permit no one person or any group to work autonomously apart from my direction and the collective decision of the rest of the department on the procedure for educational change.

"There can be no autonomous division within our department. I want to make it clear," she said. "that this is one of the basic conflicts which has arisen and which has now been resolved."

'FAT CAT SOCIETY'

OTTAWA (CP) — If farm incomes do not rise above production costs, there soon won't be any farmers, according to the president of the Ontario Soil and Crop Improvement Association.

Leland Wannamaker told an association meeting that increased production costs are continuing to force up consumer food costs.

"We've been taken for granted by our fat cat American society for too long," he said. "And we still get blamed for high food costs."

The high productivity rate of farmers, compared to other parts of the work force, is also taken for granted, he said.

North America may be following the path of ancient civilizations which began to decay by using their best food-producing lands for other purposes he said.

2-Year Pact

TORONTO (CP) — Pressmen, stereotypers and paperhandlers employed by the Star voted 167 to 52 to accept a two-year contract with the newspaper Thursday that contains provision for final-selection arbitration.

The contract provides a $42-a-week increase in the first year, bringing the rate for pressmen and stereotypers to $300 a week, plus increases Jan. 1, 1976, that will match the 1975 climb in the cost of living to a maximum of 12 per cent.

Offence Bird's Best Defence

Two robins meet on a Cook Street lawn; they posture, feint, and manoeuvre around one another for a few moments then suddenly fly at each other with beaks snapping and claws flying.

A mockingbird out Colwood way perches on a pyracantha and peers intently into a nearby window. Suddenly it flies at the window striking the glass with its beak, feet and wings before settling on the sill and pecking curiously at the pane.

A flock of gulls are milling about on Clover Point when one, for no apparent reason, bows formally to its right and left and begins to rip grass from the turf only to toss the broken blades away with a twist of its head.

A lady on a noon-hour walk through Beacon Hill Park in her new red raincoat is suddenly confronted by a glossy black bird posturing grotesquely before her on the path and displaying two bright red patches of feathers as it performs.

Avian madness? No, not quite; these four seemingly unrelated incidents, which took place around Victoria within the past year, can all be explained. They're the result of birds reacting to what they consider to be a threat to their territory; they are all defensive manoeuvres.

The Cook Street robins had met near the invisible line — which only they can recognize — marking the common boundary of their nesting territories. And a confrontation was required to settle any momentary doubts about just where the boundary fell.

On a slightly different version of the same refrain, the Colwood mockingbird was defending its winter feeding territory against, in this case, an illusionary threat — its own reflection in the glass — which it took to be another mockingbird challenging its right to the ground.

The same applies to the Clover Point gull which for reasons not always discernible to men, had staked-out a small plot of green and was showing any possible invader, by its grass-pulling act, that this was private land which trespassers entered at their peril.

So too with the Beacon Hill Park confrontation. Here was a resident male Red-winged Blackbird, apparently aroused by the red in the lady's coat and recognizing it as the traditional red-winged blackbird signal of a threat to his domain, performing the threat and display routine reserved for occasions when an interloping blackbird has to be ushered off the premises.

I was reminded of these incidents, and many others like them, while sitting-in on a recent talk by Wayne Campbell of the Provincial Museum. Wayne was speaking to the Victoria Natural History Society and his topic was territory, bird territory in particular.

According to Wayne, any attempt to define territory, as it applies to birds, usually can be reduced to defence and space — and space need not always be a piece of land.

For example, the two or three inches of a branch or wire on which a starling roosts, can be its territory for as long as the bird is in residence. On the other end of the scale might be the several square miles of hunting territory required by a pair of Golden Eagles.

But air can be territory too — the air over a pool just as much as the water surface of the same pool, or a log floating on that surface. Territory can be a lamp post, a ship's mast or a statue. It can be different things to different birds at different times of the year.

It can be feeding territory, roosting territory, nesting territory or just plain loafing territory but the one consistent feature of all these possibilities is that, if the territory is occupied it will be defended. It is recognizing and interpreting the interactions between birds that comprises defence which makes for one of the most fascinating aspects of birdwatching.

Camp Sites On Trail?

Pacific Rim National Park is considering a proposal for the construction of primitive camp sites along the 55-mile scenic west coast trail for winter hikers.

Beach camping is sometimes not possible in winter due to high tides and gales which lash the Pacific coast.

While few people walk the trail during the winter months, park officials see the day when it will be more extensively used during the season.

The climate is mild and the running sea a spectacular sight.

By the end of this summer, the parks branch will have reached the half-way mark in its trail improvement project.

John Watts, general works manager, says a work crew will be working in the vicinity of the Nitinat narrows. This would include the rebuilding of two miles of board walk.

The board walk skirting the Cheewhat river is one of the popular attractions on the trail, but over the years has fallen into disrepair.

Federal parks branch has set aside $100,000 for repairs to the footpath this year.

Watts said the trail has now a national parks warden. He has been provided with temporary accommodation by the department of transport at Pachena lighthouse, situated about 12 miles south of Bamfield.

Eventually another warden would be established at Port Renfrew, he said.

Figures on the number of people who walked part or the whole length of the trail last year are not available as no official count was taken.

But some park officials estimate the trail has as many as 8,000 day and over-night users.

Meanwhile, buying up privately-owned land within the park is proving to be an expensive proposition — especially since land prices skyrocketed last year.

Federal and provincial governments estimate they will have spent $8 million dollars when they have completed the purchase of private property in the Long Beach and Broken Island sections of the park.

Boardwalk forms part of Trail

Since the park was established in 1970 241 private properties have been bought, leaving 20 parcels of land to be purchased.

A senior provincial park official said eight islands have yet to be bought in the Broken Island section. The islands are situated in Barkley sound.

"We have purchased two," he said. "Nine of the islands are American-owned."

This year, both the federal and provincial parks branches each plan to ask their respective departments for $1.7 million for the purchase of land mostly situated in the Cape Beale area and along the 55-mile-long west coast trail between Bamfield and Port Renfrew.

This roughly comes to $3.5 million.

What surprised park officials was the large number of American-owned properties on the west coast of Vancouver Island.

SCHOOL BUILDING AT RECORD $91M

A record $91,118,000 worth of public school construction was approved during 1974, Education Minister Eileen Dailly said Friday.

Expenditures provided for construction of 751 classrooms, 56 libraries and 51 gymnasiums, as well as renovations to existing schools.

Of the total expenditure, $85 million represented the amount shareable between the boards of school trustees and the province and insurance replacement accounted for much of the difference, the minister said.

Prison Camp Set In Two Weeks

The new corrections centre at Jordan River is expected to receive its first inmates within the next two weeks.

Eleven trailer units purchased by the government from Alberta Trailer Company at a cost of roughly $100,000 are being delivered to the site and should be installed and connected to services by mid-week, Hal McGillivray, deputy director of Wilkinson Road jail said.

McGillivray has been given the task of setting up and organizing the prison camp which will have a capacity of 40 men.

The inmates will be transferred — probably 10 at a time — from the old Wilkinson Road jail which is being gradually phased out of operation.

Corrections officials had originally set Jan. 6 as the date to begin the transfer but it had to be postponed because of late delivery of the trailers.

Once at Jordan River the inmates will be involved in various projects for both the provincial parks and forestry departments.

McGillivray said he met with parks officials last week who expressed "great enthusiasm" over the prospect of acquiring manpower to develop the beaches and trails in the spectacular Juan de Fuca forest.

He said no definite commitment has been made but it is likely the inmates will begin work on Mystic and Sombrio beach areas.

The camp, located about seven miles west of Jordan River and a half-mile off the road, is comparable to the Snowden forestry camp operation near Campbell River, though much smaller, perhaps half the size.

Fiery Charlotte Dies

OTTAWA (CP) Charlotte Whitton, the 78-year-old controversial former mayor of Ottawa, died in hospital here early today.

The fiery neo-suffragette who won national fame as mayor of the city was admitted to hospital Jan. 5 following a heart attack. It was the second time in two years that Miss Whitton had been in hospital.

She was born in Renfrew, Ont., March 8, 1896, to a family that included, by her own description, "some of the blackest Irishmen" who ever worked the Ottawa River log drives.

In both public and private life Miss Whitton was a fighter. "Whatever women do they must do twice as well as men to be considered half as good," she once told a group of women during a mayoralty campaign, quickly adding "luckily, it's not difficult."

The robust former mayor was not one to stand on diplomatic niceties during her lengthy political career.

On one accasion, as mayor of Ottawa, she met the Lord Mayor of London—both wearing their official robes and chains of office—at an official function. Miss whitton was also wearing a rose.

When the foreign visitor leaned over, sniffed the rose on her evening gown and asked, "If I smell your rose will you blush?" the Ottawa mayor caustically replied "if I pull your chain will you flush?"

She first gained public office in 1950 by winning a city controller seat in Ottawa. She became mayor nine months later with the death of then mayor Grenville Goodwin, and was elected mayor in 1952 and 1954, with 3,923 and 10,000 vote pluralities respectively.

She left the mayor's chair in 1956, but returned to politics in 1960 winning the first of two more terms as mayor.

In the interim she remained active, seeking a seat in the House of Commons in 1958.

She won the Progressive Conservative nomination in Ottawa West that year—a Liberal stronghold—but ended 1,426 votes short of victory.

Afterwards, Miss Whitton wrote a column in the Ottawa Citizen before gaining re-election to the mayor's seat in 1960.

The two-year absence did little to improve her temperament, however.

Board of control sessions were—with great regularity—marked by name-calling and shouting.

Once, for instance, she charged at a husky male controlled in a rage, kicking and punching until he turned and fled.

A fall in her home in 1972 and a resultant broken hip forced Miss Whitton out of public life.

A Chance for Canadian Magazines

After months of fiddling the Trudeau administration has done what three previous prime ministers, a royal commission and a special senate inquiry couldn't do: revoke Time and Readers Digest special tax privileges whereby they were considered Canadian magazines. Because of size and resources, and the fact that Canadian advertisers in either magazine could deduct advertising bills from income tax, the two periodicals vacuumed up most of the advertising goodies in Canada, leaving the crumbs to what few Canadian magazines could limp along.

The Trudeau government deserves credit for this initiative on two counts. First it will give Canadian magazines with Canadian points of view a chance to flourish. Secondly, it will remove a thorn in the national side that has festered for more than a decade as successive administrations bent to Washington's will and let both magazines go their merry way selling the American way of life to a nation engaged in its own introspective search for a cultural specific gravity.

Just how seriously the U.S. views any obstacle to its magazines can be seen over the years. On other occasions when a hesistant external affairs department approached the U.S. state department on the subject it was flatly told that the U.S. would retaliate in other areas if Canada removed the special tax privileges. When Time officials appeared before the O'Leary Royal Commission in 1962 they stated adamantly Time was an American magazine. The state department said it looked on both magazines as an extension of foreign policy. And before the government announced new tax changes Prime Minister Trudeau raised the issue with President Ford when the two leaders met in Washington.

But government proposals are a long way from law. While the government will have almost unanimous support in the Commons, amendments seem to have a way of weakening most Liberal legislation to the point where it is a pale shadow of its original self, witness the Corporations Act. In this case, reading will be believing. In fairness to Time which is entirely U.S. owned, the government apparently promised to exempt the periodical from the tax proposals if control of the domestic operation was in the hands of Canadian shareholders, and providing 65 per cent of the content was Canadian. Time has indicated it will fold its Canadian operation while Readers Digest of Canada — 32 per cent domestically owned with five of its six directors Canadian — will continue to operate.

If the proposal becomes law it will be interesting to see how a national — and hopefully regional — periodic press develops. Another long step back on the road to making Canadians masters in their own house has been initiated. It should be implemented without amendments.

Campbell's Hockey Woes

Spare a few kind words and a warm thought for Clarence Campbell, president of the National Hockey League. He had his tin cup out the other day and was pleading poverty among the owners of Canada's national sport. It's all due to skyrocketing player salaries, which took off when the World Hockey Association was created three years ago, claims the NHL's grand old man. Salaries are 250 per cent higher now than in the 1971-72 season.

But instead of blaming the players, Campbell might consider a variety of other factors. It's more likely that the NHL is suffering the pains of over-rapid expansion, just like any of the fast-food franchise chains that sprang up in the same period.

Worst of all, the game has suffered a dilution of proficiency and skill of large proportions. Although Clarence Campbell would argue vigorously to the contrary, perhaps a retrenchment might be the best thing since kids stopped playing on frozen outdoor rinks with magazines stuffed down their socks for pads.

A Nature Ramble With Skipper

By Freeman King

Let us now wander down the hill and take the trail across the meadows — here is a new world opening up to us.

At this time of year, the grasses are bright and green, just waiting for the sunlight to come. If we look closely, we can find many kinds of grasses, most of them imported from other lands.

As we stand there and watch, let's turn our minds to the summer months when all these plants will be covered with flowers and will wave in the wind like a sail on some quiet bay. Do we realize that the grass family is one of the most important to man, for from it comes a large part of our food from the milk we drink to the meat we eat and the sugar we use in our daily lives, and even the bread we eat — all come from the grass family.

If we think for a while, we will see what a wonderful plant it is. In the summer, the farmer will mow it down and dry it, then bale it and store it back in his barns and feed it to his livestock in the winter. It does the same thing at this stage, providing food and nourishment for cattle who in turn make food of it for us, as when it was fresh and green and growing in the field. We wonder just how this is accomplished, for a bundle of dried leaves and stems.

There is only one way, and that is through solar energy, the locked-up energy that was provided by the sun, the giver of all life upon earth.

Let us wander down by the little stream that slowly meanders along its way to the sea. Here we can find many different kinds of life, particularly plant life. Here we will spot the curly dock with its tall spike of seeds still hanging on and close to the ground some of the plantain with its broad leaves and perhaps we can see a little brook lime just starting to find its way to the sunlight.

Let's look close in the water, where we will find animal life — perhaps a small diving beetle, and the runway of a field mouse where he scuttles about in search of food. Come back in the summer and we will find many more living creatures all going about their alloted tasks, yet each one its own environment.

Now we come to a hedge that has grown up around the old fence. Here the picture changes again, for we find thickets of roses and clumps of harhack that like the damp soil.

Here is a place where we can find the regional plant of this area, for here the ground hasn't been touched by the mowers, so plants have survived and the introduced plants have not penetrated and taken over.

If we come early in the morning, I think we would have seen visitors from another world, the world of birds. The crows would have been here searching for the worms that penetrated to the open ground where now they have become part of the great chain of food.

If we stop to think a bit, we would realize that this lovely little creature is essential to our lives for it ploughs the earth so the rains can penetrate — without this, the earth would become like concrete.

EDITOR'S NOTEBOOK

A Conversation With David Barrett

By GEORGE OAKE

He comes out, ushers you past the electric typewriters and five guardians of the gate. Suddenly you're in the 19th century of heavy mahogany and the Tiffany lamp, like a scene viewed through a yellow filter.

When you sit in front of the desk he takes off his jacket and motions towards the more informal setting of a chesterfield and coffee table in the corner.

Pulling up a chair, he places his watch on the table, mute testament that Premier David Barrett is busy and wants to get going.

I'm a politician. I practise the art of politics ... for the development of a more rational and sane type of society. Without communication the art doesn't function.

"That's why I gave a very clear and simple explanation of what we could do with the gas money. Now sometimes that's too simple for people to understand. They have been brainwashed into believing that only the oil companies had the magic to make a profit, only the oil companies had the magic to find the gas and oil, and only the international oil cartel knows how to explain things in high powered advertising.

"I do my explaining in a very honest forthright manner. There is "X" amount of dollars available; I don't want it to go to the oil companies. Therefore we will share it three ways."

To separate the man from the politician is like trying to boil honey out of a graham wafer.

A herd of Barretts charges around in the one body. Sometimes one rushes to the fore only to be trampled by a welter of new ideas surging into the lead. Initially, I asked a dumb question about whether western society was headed for a breakdown as so many doom and gloom merchants have prophesied.

The premier fielded it with aplomb, saying we were headed for a "period of readjustment." His explanation managed to put a logical rope around the Vietnam war, Richard Nixon, Watergate, the tapes, general wastefulness and fallibility in public office.

Concluding, he said: "There's an absence of direct involvement of people in politics. They're still exploited politically by rhetoric, jingoism, meaningless slogans and general sort of nonsensical statements."

In a word association test Barrett would probably pair jingoism with Social Credit.

"I lose my patience with the audacity of some of the statements made in the house by people who were in the former administration. At no time did we have a Hansard, a question period ... It makes one a little bit angry to sit in that chamber and have that group spout about freedoms.

"When they were in power you couldn't sue the Crown and I didn't see the business establishment screaming about the loss of freedoms under Social Credit. That kind of thing gets me on the edge of temper because it's such mindless hypocrisy.

"I think there will be the most bitter political struggle in the history of this province in the next provincial election," he added.

If the outrage is clearly visible, it is sincere, and goes all the way back to childhood. Barrett has a deep feeling for B.C. that borders on sentimentality.

"This is my home. I was raised here and I love it very much. I confess that completely," he said laughing at his admission as if to cover embarrassment.

Grim faced again he remembers changes that were taking place in the Vancouver of his youth, the "lack of control, loss of space" and the rhetoric he read about which nothing was done. Elected to the legislature 12 years ago it forged his outrage to an indignant sheen.

"Every year I'd hear some member of one party or another saying, ... this is dreadful, we've got to stop ... and I can remember vividly everybody in the house applauding, hitting the desks. But when we did it ..."

Like the bashful sentiment, missionary zeal surges up and then subsides to make way for new thoughts.

"I don't have the kind of vested interest in power that perhaps other political leaders either condition themselves to or fall into. I'm not saying that I'm any better or any worse; I'm saying I have some conscious awareness of the placing of my own acts, plus I'm very blessed with a happy personal life which is something I'm very pleased with.

"... I have a drive of wanting to say, this is right, it's right, it's good and should be done. I want to feel that we have made decisions on this basis rather than saying ... but wait until the political climate is better."

When Barrett comes on like this — in reference to the Land Commission Act he said, "politically we probably suffer ... because we had the guts to do it" — he sounds like a righteous martyr, ready for the crucifixion over the hill. Face to face, he disarms you, envelops you, and it is only later that questions surface.

If there is a little Barnum and Bailey mixed with a real sense of mission there is no cynicism, only a speedy, ebullient mind that can't be pigeonholed or sneered at because of the occasional anomaly bubbling up. A Jewish home, an American Jesuit education and B.C. politics are a volatile mix in any mind.

"You become cynical if you become part of the system and lose the vision. I've never lost the vision.

"I spent six years with the Jesuits, and I have a framework, a kind of philosophical pace. But what I've been able to do, I think, is to realistically stand back and say okay, this is the level at which they are functioning. If I am going to function adequately, I have to go in and operate at that level, which I've done.

"I consciously set out to abandon in my mind that I had six years of formal university training. It was a handicap to practising the art of politics ... in this province. Anyway, I deliberately abandoned that as a part of my functioning without abandoning its conditioning which is an excellent part of my training."

Jesuit conditioning, social work and perhaps negative public reaction to some NDP legislation over the last two and one-half years have shaped a theory of political change in the premier's mind.

"Once you are involved in change, you're dislocating patterns. Even if someone is psychologically suffering because certain conditions exist. If you suffer with that condition for a certain period of time, your behavior adjusts to that suffering. Then something comes along and changes that suffering for you, and you lose the security of that suffering. So you don't know the change is better for you; it may be something you wanted all along. But the trauma of the change itself is too threatening for you to handle."

Abstract political theories don't fuzz the reality though. Barrett has no illusions about continuing antagonism from the business community, or changes in work relationships vis-a-vis trade unions and management. Nor does he look upon the election of the NDP in B.C. as an act of natural political reason.

"Certainly not within this generation," he said, referring to changes in the adversary relationship of labor and management.

"Our province is still the wild west, the last frontier. The very fact that we got elected is part of the wild west syndrome. It wasn't an ideological commitment to democratic socialism or an ideological commitment to Social Credit.

"We're 'aginners' in B.C. We don't want the Liberals, we don't want the Tories, because they represent that establishment people unconsciously have moved away from, either as immigrants from other countries or immigrants within Canada."

He bemoans what he considers a dearth of reason in political thinking, not only on the part of the B.C. electorate, but throughout the continent.

"I don't think there is anywhere in North America where people discuss politics with reason as a handmaiden. I learned that very quickly the first year I was here. I used to make very academic speeches and I found that I not only put the opposition into outrageous snores, but my own group fell asleep as well."

"You spend a couple of hours in front of the television each night and think of the number of things you are bombarded with in terms of goods, pleasures and fears ... We're starved in the intellectual area. What chance has the intellect got of reasoning out problems when you have this overwhelming pressure of material?

"I don't think we in North America have the opportunity of spending much time reasoning together. ... We have glimpses, images, flashes, pressures, suasions, everything happening all at once. All you're left with is a feeling rather than a reasoned kind of thing."

During this exchange we were eyeball to eyeball, hunched over the coffee table, me nodding and the premier slapping the table for emphasis.

All of a sudden he straightened up and grinned: "I don't know if you make any sense out of all this."

China obviously reinforced some of Barrett's misgivings about the good life as practised in Canada and the United States.

"Certainly the visit confirmed some of my feelings about our adolescent behaviour in North America. ... We are selfish, grasping, demanding people. We have had the best of the material world simply because we are white, and we have been almost atavistic in terms of the use of resources and people."

But he doesn't believe the Chinese model is applicable to this continent because of lack of "selflessness" in our educational system and social structures.

Later, in the middle of a discussion on Thomistic philosophy, he paused and went back to the Middle Kingdom.

"I can see the need for patience and the long distance view of things more after my visit to China than before. Those people have endured so much, and they're going to be around a long time, you get that feeling ... absolutely! Okay." He punctuates conversation like a bebop drummer accents the melody, as if to confirm his own point. Klook ... mop ... mop. Then it's back to philosophy and to hell with the bridge.

Barrett in his office in legislative buildings

And then, whap, some strange chords out of right field, considering what's gone before.

"I am absolutely committed to the monarchy, I am. People find this very strange so I don't say it too often ... the system we function in is going to outlast all of our foolishness, our craziness and everything else. This system we have is unparalleled anywhere in the world and I'm a total traditionalist.

"The first committment I had, in terms of the one thing that I privately wanted to feel as a citizen long after I'm out of politics, was restoring this building ... This is our heritage this building ... It is so important in terms of continuity.

"I feel very socially and psychologically very comfortable in this surrounding," he says, nodding at the office that looks like a set out of The National Dream.

"I'm conscious of a great deal of thankfulness — I don't know if this sounds corny—for the system we have. It allows nondescript people like myself to come into office if we wish to really invest the time and energy in seeking office. Now that's pretty unusual."

Any service club would applaud. Barrett really seems to believe it all. He is his own kaleidoscope, dropping thoughts, observations, theories and philosophy at will. Every topic brought a book title to back his contentions.

"Well, I read a lot of everything. I don't read as much as I used to; what do you want to know about the Second World War?

"I find a fascinating abhorrence from Tuchman's works on, right up until the late 1940s — the whole rise of fascism. We've lived in the worst of man's time. I don't know if it's going to get any better ... There's no parallel to the horrors of which we've lived in. For those who argue that society has made great progress can you relate to me in history another time where a highly civilized nation blinded itself to the fact that people were being butchered in concentration camps?"

The kaleidoscope turns inward for a brief flash.

"I have faults as a human being. One that I've managed to control a lot better in the last year and a half than previously — I have my temper; that's not good in politics. I think I can be a lot more philosophical."

At the end he was back to politics, hammering away at the opposition, wondering where all their money was coming from.

Walking down the rainswept walk in front of the building he is so proud of, I thought of two of his machine-gun bursts.

"You have to swim upstream if you're going to preserve yourself in any society. But you can't stand up and say you flaunt the world."

"That's a part of the fabric of B.C. — the grandiose scheme. The former premier perfected it, but others developed it: McBride, Patullo, Hart, Amor de Cosmos. Amor ... set the tone of politics in B.C. He was a little bit crazy and things haven't settled down since then."

I couldn't help thinking David Barrett wouldn't want it any other way.

North Development:

"We have no intention of building any more dams in the north west part of B.C.

"There's no question about that (environmental damage in the north as the result of railway building). But we were locked into that. The controls were let by the former government and we have monitored it every step of the way. Had we been in control then, I don't think it would have happened that way. But you can hardly blame us for contracts that were let by a previous administration, which incidentally are going to involve tens of millions of dollars more than what the former administration said.

"... I think it is grossly innacurate to say that it is our railroad; it was announced before the last election. The contracts were let months before we came in, and away they went. For the impression too be left that it was us who did it is totally inaccurate ... Once a river has been damaged in terms of the pristine ecological area that some people are concerned about, such as the Peace, then of course we're going to maximize the river. That's the obvious choice to make."

The Three-Way Split:

"... The proposal I made was better than the one they accepted. They accepted my proposal on the basis of the fact that they were caught in a political jam. If anybody looks at the situation realistically, they will recognize that Donald Macdonald had established one policy in terms of the British Columbia Petroleum Corporation and Mr. Turner came in with another policy that had completely no relationship with what Macdonald had instructed us to do. And they were caught in a terrible log jam. So as a compromise out of it, they accepted another approach to this tax rebate thing which would be more adjustable to meet Turner's needs, rather than take a straight revenue sharing.

"But the revenue sharing was not rhetoric. It was an attempt to display for the first time to the Canadian people the value of our resources that we had been selling, and, if proper value was available for these resources, the impact they could have on our whole economy."

On the Press:

"I think the press is a little paranoid itself. It spends a great deal of time drinking its own bathwater. In some instances they (the press) have not done adequate jobs of reporting, nor have they done the kind of depth reporting that I think perhaps is done in other jurisdictions. I find very little thoughtful research material in the media. The nature of the media has changed too. Radio for example is one of the most difficult things to cope with, for young men or women to work for. They are given specific deadlines, and have to run around the corridors. .. shoving microphones in the face of 'newsmakers.' They give squibs that have to go on every two or three hours. The monster demands news to be made rather than adequate rational explanations, both by the opposition and government."

A Victim of Political and Bureaucratic Inertia

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

In quiet conversation amid the storm over his dismissal this week Dr. Stanley Knight said he has placed his faith and his fate in the hands of democracy.

"If democracy exists I'll be reinstated," he said. The principles of fair play and the NDP's own progressive philosophy of education would prevail.

Knight is an earnest, soft-spoken man and an articulate, highly-qualified and progressive educator whose calm optimism is a refreshing relief from the doom and gloom of tired bureaucrats. But he is politically naive and stubbornly oblivious to the realities of bureaucratic gamesmanship.

If he had been just a little less sincere and a good deal more political he might still be picking up his handsome salary as director of the education department's new high-powered research and development division.

As it is, Knight was fired with barely a day's notice and his new brain trust is headed for destruction. (Department officals insist the division will continue as planned but it is generally assumed those of the group who remain will lose a hefty chunk of their mandate or be shuffled quietly back into the regular departmental divisions.)

Knight was the sacrificial victim of a bureaucratic structure and a political structure, both fearful of change.

He joined the provincial government last July at age 35 with nearly 15 years of practical experience in education.

For five years he taught and served as vice-principal at four different elementary schools around B.C. Then he moved to Simon Fraser University to work with its student-teacher program.

During the summers he picked up his Master of Education in administration and then headed for Oregon University where he received his doctorate in curriculum and instruction and stayed on to work at a large centre for handicapped children.

He returned to Vancouver, spent two years teaching and counselling high school students and then left for Australia under contract to set up a new student-teacher program at an education college. The program was considered a great success, he said, but he was eager to continue his ideas for educational change and after two years returned to B.C.

Two weeks later he was chosen among several applicants for the new civil service post of director of the proposed research and development division.

The division was to set up study groups throughout B.C. to discuss the department's white paper on education and through it to discuss educational change. The white paper was a vague, philosophical statement presented by Education Minister Eileen Dailly soon after the dismissal of Education Commissioner John Bremer.

Bremer, first hired to lead the forces of educational change, was fired when Premier Barrett decided he was talking too much, listening too little and generally not making any visible progress.

So Knight took up the mandate to stir public discussion and community involvement in the process of trying to change B.C.'s school system. Instead of a one-man commission like Bremer, Knight was assigned to hire an entire division.

But Dailly wanted only a quiet, comfortable royal commission to pacify the public, according to Knight, and when he announced some two months later he had hired his staff and was eager to begin, "she nearly had a heart attack."

Dailly, the ex-teacher who held out so much promise for a new progressive approach to education when she took over the department, has carefully managed to avoid doing anything to change the school system. Her refusal to implement any new policies has gone beyond a political desire not to rock the boat and she seems incapable of making any decision or coping with even the slightest amount of controversy.

In their determination to modernize the school system and stir up the public in the process, Knight and his new brain trust were a threat to Dailly.

But perhaps even more critical to Knight's survival, the group presented a threat to the department's long-established bureaucratic structure. The long-time civil servants in the department's upper management felt their positions threatened by this young up-start who didn't want to do basic research — like counting how many lathes there are in B.C.'s school system, a project Knight indignantly rejected — and who obviously wanted to upset the established lines of authority and control.

Knight is a great exponent of the "collegiality" theory of management.

Dailly is also an exponent of the theory, as it applies to group decision-making in schools, but the theory isn't quite so palatable when someone tries it too close to home.

It meant Knight's division didn't necessarily accept orders from above and it meant the line of authority in the department was threatened. Even more threatened than the old-liners, who have been forced to cope with many upsets since the NDP took over from the Socreds, was deputy minister Jack Fleming, who has moved comfortably and quickly into the power vacuum left by Dailly.

Knight was fired because he wouldn't co-operate. Translated, that means he upset the system by trying to initiate within the department the kind of changes the government had said it wants to see in the school system.

Knight said he and his group were the only ones in the department who were not afraid to support the NDP's education philosophy of decentralizing authority, restoring local autonomy and allowing for flexibility.

"I think Premier Barrett will support me," he concluded, "because I support the NDP's policies and the rest of the people there don't."

But there is no chance the premier will intervene to support Knight despite pressure from more left-wing members of his caucus.

Barrett has often said his greatest disappointment since taking office is the fear of change he has seen in the B.C. public. But the longer his party stays in office and the closer the next election gets, the more that same kind of fear creeps up in his own government. Barrett may be unhappy with the situation but he knows it is wiser politically not to rock the boat any further.

'We Shouldn't Forget His Deeds Were Good'

By RICHARD WEST
Manchester Guardian

When Albert Schweitzer celebrated his ninetieth birthday on January 14, 1965, he had been acclaimed as one of the greatest men in the world by Kennedy, Khrushchev, Churchill, the Queen and Einstein: also by hundreds of millions of lesser people; and most of all by thousands of Gabonese peasants who came that day from all along the Ogowe River to bring him presents of fish, crab, mango, and pineapple. The Mayor of Lambarene, who had himself been born in Schweitzer's hospital, thanked the man "who had given up everything to care for us."

This month, on the centenary of his birth, Schweitzer is no longer much written about, or discussed or even remembered. His idolaters and his would-be debunkers have ceased their squabble over the dead man whose life had been so controversial. All this is a pity because Schweitzer's life-work and ideas seem still more relevant to the decade since his death (later in 1965) than they were to the decades before.

In much of the writing on Schweitzer, especially that by English people, one notices puzzlement, even unease, about his personality and career. For example, was he German or French? As a native of Alsace which changed hands in 1870 and again in 1918, Schweitzer spent half his life as a German and half as a Frenchman but in culture and character he belonged to the former nation.

Paris he once described as "a biggish provincial town" and he felt more at home in Berlin or Bayreuth, where he began his book on Bach after listening to Tristan.

Later in life, Schweitzer shocked some of his pacifist friends by saying that he had much enjoyed his national service in the Prussian army. But Schweitzer was no chauvinist; indeed the strongest influence on his life and thought was Goethe, in whose former Strasbourg lodgings he lived as a student. Like Goethe, Schweitzer was a polymath and he excelled as organist, repairer of organs, musicologist, doctor, theologian, author, and farmer.

Why did a man with so many outstanding talents decide to serve as a doctor outside a little town in Africa? This question disturbed Schweitzer's Strasbourg friends who told him that a "general does not serve in the front line." It has disturbed certain later critics of Schweitzer who hint, even state, that he sacrificed his family for the sake of perverse selfmartyrdom.

Little is known of Schweitzer's intimate life but the charge that (like David Livingstone) he destroyed his wife's health has to be reconciled with the fact that she lived to be seventy-five. His daughter loved Schweitzer and went to work at the hospital after his death. Like him, she enjoyed the work of relieving sickness and pain in Africa.

'A Sort of Heresy'

Many journalists who had interviewed Schweitzer later turned round and accused him of craving publicity, or "backing into the limelight" by disappearing to Africa. Even James Cameron, in a rare lapse of judgment, called him "the man who through half a century conned the world into an adoration in which the mere investigation of his pretensions was a sort of heresy."

In fact Schweitzer attracted little publicity for the first 70 years of his life and was never met by journalists on his returns to Europe. The main cause of his great exposure late in life was the opening of a scheduled air service from Brazzaville to Lambarene after the Second World War.

From then on Schweitzer's hospital attracted not only just journalists but earnest religious cranks, pacifists, silly debutantes, and disgruntled heiresses, most of whom were received with politeness and hospitality. But did Schweitzer really want these people to come? Many journalists are inclined to say that if a famous person refuses to see them he is stuck up but if he agrees he is athirst for publicity.

For most of his life Schweitzer was out of step with the modish popular moralists who dictated ideas. During the First World War, which convulsed the world during his early years at Lamberene, Schweitzer took neither side, and neither side cared about him until the French in 1917 had him shipped back to Europe as an enemy alien.

In the escapist Twenties, Schweitzer became well known as an organist and theologian but his work in Africa was regarded as mild eccentricity. He was best known in Germany until the rise to power of the Nazis, whom Schweitzer loathed both because of moral revulsion and his Jewish wife.

However, Schweitzer could not endorse the Left, least of all the Communists whom he accused of being behind the African "human leopard societies" that murdered people with knives like that animal's claws. Always suspicious of politicians, Schweitzer kept out of the 1940 war between the Free French and the Vichyites, who fought a battle at Lambarene. Even the hospital was hit.

It was not till 1945 when Schweitzer had been in Africa for more than thirty years that his theories and his example acquired universal relevance and urgency. Two events that year shocked the conscience of the world more than any others in history. One was the discovery of the abominations committed at Dachau, Belsen and Buchenwald. The other was the atomic attack on Japan.

Perhaps we are still too close to these things to appreciate just how much they changed our thinking. They meant an end to a faith in science, progress, human perfectibility, human betterment, even human survival.

Obvious Hero

Schweitzer's retreat into Africa, his pacifism, his hatred of ideology, his distrust of scientific advance made him an obvious hero to post-war youth. His cult was especially strong in countries like Germany and Japan where guilt and suffering from the war were strongest.

His great age and the airline to Lambarene made Schweitzer increasingly interesting to the newspapers, who fed and embellished his legend. He became a supporter and some said a dupe of the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament and other peace organisations that flourished during the fifties. He won the Nobel Prize, using the money to build a leprosorium and an extension to his hospital.

Even this period of intellectual approbation did not survive till Schweitzer's death. Better relations between the United States and Russia took the urgency out of the peace movement (without removing the danger of war) and young people took up other causes.

One of these was the liberation of Africa, and here Schweitzer was seen as an obdurate reactionary, at best a paternalist and at worst at racist. He never employed an African doctor, never allowed Africans to sit in his presence, and always addressed them as "tu." He distrusted African politicians and thought the apartheid system salutary to South Africa.

This attitude might be most fairly described as old-fashioned. The Gabon was a colony for the first forty years that Schweitzer spent there and it was not thought proper to treat Africans differently. Schweitzer was not a hypocrite for he did not pretend to look on Africans as his equals. However, unlike many South Africans, he never came to dislike the blacks.

Those who, rightly, condemn Schweitzer's attitude cannot argue that French Equatorial Africa has been improved by freedom. Of the four present states, the Central African Republic is ruled by Bokassa, a murderous tyrant; Chad is racked by tribal and racial war; Congo-Brazzaville is a bush Marxist state where the corpse of a dead rebel was shown on TV, its mouth tastefully stuffed with dollar bills. Gabon itself has produced the judicial novelty that a living man who is unpopular with the state may be declared officially dead and his property confiscated. All four countries suffer French commercial exploitation without enjoying her more beneficial influence.

With his love and respect for Nature, his loathing of technology (he cheered when the only two cars in Lambarene were wrecked in a head-on collision), his scorn for the vulgarity of modern industrial society, he must be regarded as a pioneer of today's environmentalists and ecologists, (he would not have liked the words). When told by an Ethiopian that his country had no oil, Schweitzer said: "Wonderful . . . You might be left in peace for a little while yet." Now Gabon has oil and may be plunged into war for it, as was neighbouring Nigeria.

Schweitzer's dislike of modern civilization did not make him escapist. He went to Africa as a doctor to serve those "who live without help or hope of help." Like Goethe's Faust he had studied deeply and widely but found meaning only in work for others. Schweitzer's deeds were good and should not be forgotten.

SCHWEITZER . . . post-war hero forgotten

A Maritimes Myth Shot

By HARRY BRUCE

HALIFAX — So far as crimes of violence are concerned, many Maritimers have long believed their society was holier than thine. Even before Confederation, they often regarded Canadians as backwoods barbarians of the western frontier.

Nova Scotia, after all, had achieved responsible government with no more violence than the fuming embarrassment of a couple of British governors.

But up there in the Canadas, where civilized political skills were as rare as good table manners, the fight for responsible government had involved hangings, gunfire, riots, burning villages, marching troops, all that sort of truck. Canadians were hotheads, and a trifle brutish.

More than a century passed and, though some things went terribly wrong in the Maritimes, her people could still argue that there were good and gentle reasons, civilized reasons, for staying where they were. One of these was freedom from the uglier arts of human violence.

People are not publicly keen to discuss the motorcycle gangs of Dartmouth, N.S., but, during the first half of the 70s, the stomach-turning sexual assaults by some of their members became national news.

And their intimidation of public drinking establishments, their bloody brawls with the police, the freedom with which they practised their code of violent revenge, were common knowledge in every tavern in Halifax County.

There's also overwhelming circumstantial evidence that a motorcycle gang settled a grudge against the Dartmouth Free Press by blasting out a wall of the weekly's plant with dynamite.

We hear less about the gangs these days than we did a year ago. Instead, we hear about murder.

Last summer, a young woman was knifed to death on Citadel Hill in the heart of Halifax. The preliminaries to her execution were hideous.

A couple of months later, an unknown number of people tied a 15-year-old boy to trees in Point Pleasant Park, and took some time killing him. The circumstances of his murder might have nausated the producer of even your sickest television police drama.

The recent murder of two Moncton police was another horrible addition to the evidence that the Maritimes may yet turn out to be as violent as the most goon-ridden Montreal pier, the sleaziest Toronto bar, a shoot out with an Alberta madman or, say, a drug-frazzled West Coast death cult.

A senior Halifax cop darkly warns us we can only expect more of this sort of thing. Cop-shooting, we can conclude, is in. The wave will have to take its ghastly course, to roll eastward till it sweeps even these sane and seagirt shores.

The Mirror, a weekly out of Middleton, N.S., said that he who attacks "our thin blue line" attacks us, our families, our homes. Only the thickness of the policeman's body "stands between you and chaotic anarchy and despotism."

Meanwhile, a V. W. Eldridge, a resident of Yarmouth, wrote a frightened letter to the Yarmouth Vanguard about local mob rule, and about "reported rape, murder, vandalism, major crimes of all kind." In Yarmouth, apparently the chaotic anarchy had already arrived.

Eldridge's letter was not entirely hysterical. Yarmouth has had a tough time lately with its home-grown thugs, and someone had just stolen 46 handguns from the house of a local collector. (Yarmouth's own thin blue line later recovered 42 of them.)

Up the shore, young Digby hockey fans were building so powerful a reputation as a rinkside goon squad that outside teams were considering boycotting the place.

At the Atlantic Bowl football game last fall, University of Toronto players endured such violent abuse from fans of the St. Mary's Huskies that the Toronto coach publicly stated he never again wanted to bring any team to such a dumb, bush-league town as Halifax.

The truth is, there's always been a lot of fond fantasy in the idea that Maritimers are indigenously civilized in the matter of violence. Let he who doubts me walk into any Cape Breton tavern late some Saturday night, and announce, "I'm from Trawna, and I can lick any man in the room."

Peter McCreath, an articulate Halifax County high-school teacher, blew the big secret the other day in the course of commenting on spectator violence at local sports events. He said "Fighting, it would appear, is by far the most popular sport in Nova Scotia."

But fighting — the plain, old-fashioned, eye-blackening, tooth-cracking, nose-mashing swinging of honest fists — is positively healthy by comparison with the more sensational crimes of recent months. And at least it's traditional.

Despite Toronto Forecast City Realtors Eye Action

By AL FORREST
Times Business Editor

The real estate industry in Victoria will continue to outperform the national average and total value of sales in 1975 is expected to be as high or higher than the $62.7 million sold in 1974, the Victoria Real Estate Board said Friday.

The board was commenting on a study by Realty Research Group Ltd. of Toronto which said Canadian house sales are expected to decline in 1975.

The Toronto study predicted an increase in the number of single-family homes vacant across Canada and a decline in the number of new condominiums and other multiple-family homes coming on the market.

"In the longer run, say by the end of 1975, a return to more normal market conditions is likely. However, the boom conditions of the last few years will remain only memories," Realty Research Group Ltd. said.

The Victoria board said demand for houses is higher in Victoria than in most Canadian cities because of continuing strong interest in Vancouver Island as a retirement centre.

"The number of enquiries from Alberta and Saskatchewan this month has been brisk," a spokesman for the board said. "There has been no decline in the demand for retirement homes."

However, he conceded there were signs of a slightly diminishing demand for other types of housing during the past three months.

Demand would continue to be moderate until spring, when an upswing could be expected, he said. At that point, prices would begin to rise and would continue to rise steadily during the year. This recovery would come sooner than the national average as predicted by the Toronto research group.

If, as expected, the number of Victoria MLS sales is down but dollar value up in 1975, it would follow the pattern of the previous year. In 1974 dollar value of MLS sales rose to $62.7 million from $58 million but number of sales decline to 1,900 from 2,300 in 1973.

This pattern of lower sales but higher value was evident this fall, although both value and number of sales were higher in December, compared to a year earlier.

In December there were 174 sales worth $7.8 million, up from 125 sales worth $46. million the previous year.

Average sale in December was worth $44,000, up from $37,700 the previous December.

Meanwhile, the Toronto study predicts that the shortage of housing will continue to increase at the same time houses are sitting vacant. This ironic situation is due to the fact many who are seeking homes will not be able to afford the high down payments or large mortgages at present interest rates.

In addition, the lower level of housing starts in 1974 will result in a low number of completions this year.

Both problems would be corrected as interest rates come down, houses start to sell and developers are encouraged to resume construction.

However, the eastern study predicts it will be year's end before there is significant improvement, while local real estate spokesmen expect an upturn by spring.

MINE CUTS BACK

VANCOUVER (CP) — Western Mines Ltd. has announced it is cutting production at its Myra Creek mine because of federal and provincial tax levies.

W. G. Jewitt, president of the company said that an estimated net profit before royalties and taxes of about $1.1 million would be changed to a net loss of $750,000 by the imposition of royalties and taxes totalling $1.8 million, or 170 per cent of net profit before taxes.

Stiff Penalty for Negligence

YOUR TAXES

By I. H. ASPER

As tax return filing time approaches, the several hundred thousand taxpayers, who have income from sources other than pure employment, should be gathering up their receipts, bank interest slips, dividend records and the like, in order to prepare for the guaranteed annual rage of filing a complex, detailed and accurate return.

Each year, thousands fail to do the job accurately and face all sorts of unnecessary inconveniences as a result. Penalties for late filing, interest on overdue amounts, the cost of auditors are only some of the expenses, not to mention loss of time from other activities, that befall the individual whose return omits something.

More ominous, is the power of the tax authorities to levy substantial penalties against the taxpayer who innocently, but negligently files an inaccurate return. And the authorities are using that power more frequently these days.

The law provides that where a taxpayer omits to report his income fully or in any material ways files an incorrect return, in circumstances which amount to gross negligence, the Revenue is entitled to charge a penalty equal to 25 per cent of the unstated or unreported income on top of the normal tax plus interest.

That's a pretty stiff penalty even though the law requires the Minister to prove that the negligence of the taxpayer was not mere carelessness but, rather, gross negligence. The term gross implies a recklessness or wanton disregard of the responsibilities and consequences.

It is always a moot point as to whether or not an ommission is caused by a mere mistake or by gross negligence but there are cases where gross negligence has been found on the part of a taxpayer even though he had relied upon his accountant or other professional advice in preparing his return.

Only a few weeks ago, the Revenue took a taxpayer to court in order to collect the 25 per cent penalty in a case which could have happened to almost anyone who has income from several sources.

The taxpayer always had his chartered accountant prepare his return, which covered income from business as well as investment. In 1969 he had received a $12,000 dividend from a company in which he was interested, and it was he who filed the dividend record for the company with the Tax Department and issued himself the pink T-5 slip.

However, he misfiled this slip. In discussions with his accountant, in prepairing his return, both were aware of the dividend and that about $3,000 in tax had to be paid. However, the actual return was prepared by an employee of the accountant who wasn't aware of the misfiled dividend slip. The employee, ignoring the dividend, told the taxpayer he was entitled to a refund.

This should have tugged the taxpayer's memory, and launched the question of the dividend, because he had previously been told he would have to pay $3,000 in tax.

However, he must have had other things on his mind. The next step in the folly came when it was time to read and sign the return — that might have jogged his recollection.

Unfortunately, the taxpayer was leaving town, the tax return wasn't typed yet, so he signed it in blank not too uncommon and instructed the accountant's employee to fill it in and file it.

In short order the department discovered the omission, assessed the $3,000 tax, plus interest and levied the 25 per cent penalty. The taxpayer promptly paid the tax and interest but objected to the penalty on the ground that the omission was innocent, arising from an honest mistake and not through gross negligence.

Off they went to the Tax Review Board, where it was ruled that the taxpayer had been guilty of gross negligence. He then appealed to the Federal Court trial division where it was ruled that because he had signed the return in blank, he was responsible for the accountant's conduct, and that conduct amounted to gross negligence.

Between the time of those two appeals, the Tax Act was amended to put the onus of proving gross negligence squarely on the shoulders of the Revenue.

The taxpayer appealed again, this time to the Federal Court Appeals Division. Here he received vindication. The three judges ruled unanimously that the crown had not proved gross negligence on the part of the accountant. While there was obviously negligence it had not been so great as to warrant the 25 per cent penalty.

So the taxpayer finally won, even though two out of three tax courts were prepared to see him lose. And, in fact, he lost. The legal and other court costs, plus the amount of time spent fighting the case surely cost more than a $3,000 penalty.

The point is, it could have all been avoided if more care and time had been taken. Other taxpayers may not be as lucky. And certainly, notice has been served that the Revenue intends to involve the penalty section of the law more frequently in the future.

ACCIDENTS INCREASE BY 22%

There were 22 per cent more accidents in B.C. during the first eight months of 1974 than for the same period in 1973, statistics from the provincial transport and communications department show.

A total of 48,084 motor vehicle accidents were recorded in the province from January to August, 1974, compared to 39,342 during the same time in 1973.

In 1974, 837 people died in car accidents, compared to 825 in 1973.

Public Notice

Re the Workers' Compensation Act and Re the Forest Products Industry

Under the Workers' Compensation Act, assessments for sawmilling are made in two classes.

Members of the British Columbia Lumber Manufacturers' Association are assessed in respect of their sawmill operations under Class 11. Other sawmill operators are assessed under Class 1, subclass 5.

Section 35 of the Act provides:

"(1) The Board may
(a) create new classes in addition to those mentioned in section 34;
(b) consolidate or rearrange from time to time any of the existing classes; and
(c) withdraw from any class any industry or any part of any class or subclass included therein and transfer it wholly or in part to any other class, or form it into a separate class.

(2) In case of any rearrangement of the classes, or the withdrawal of any industry from any class, the Board may make such adjustment and disposition of the funds, reserves, and accounts of the classes affected as may be deemed just and expedient."

The Board has under consideration a request from the Interior Lumber Manufacturers' Association that its members be treated as a separate class, or otherwise should have the benefit of a rate differential under Section 40. The Board has concluded that this question cannot be considered separately from a consideration of Class 11, whether that class should be continued, or expanded, or should be consolidated with Class 1, subclass 5.

This notice is to announce that the Board intends to consider:

1. Whether a new class should be created for members of any other association analogous to Class 11, or a rate differential applied for its members under Section 40, or
2. Whether Class 11 should be extended to operations other than sawmilling of the members of the British Columbia Lumber Manufacturers' Association, or
3. The present position should be maintained, or
4. Class 11 should be consolidated with Class 1, subclass 5.

Would anyone wishing to make a written submission on these questions please do so by the 1st of May, 1975.

Would anyone wishing to make an oral submission please notify the Board, and arrangements will be made for oral submissions to be received. It is planned that oral submissions will be received after the 1st of May, 1975, at times and places to be announced.

French Goal: Kilowatt Car

PARIS (CP) — The rising cost of gasoline, currently retailing at about $1.80 a gallon, is causing France to intensify research into electric vehicles.

Several electric buses, capable of transporting about 40 passengers at a top speed of 35 miles an hour, are already plying the Paris streets on a trial basis.

Cities such as Lyon and Dijon are also experimenting, in their municipal services, with several electric cars built by Renault and the Electricite de France company.

And the 50 or so French owners of Citadine, an experimental electric car made by the Teilhol company, claim their costs are 1-10th the cost they would be for a gasoline-propelled vehicle.

The dozen-odd firms engaged in research have an ardent spokesman in Andre Jarrot, French cabinet minister responsible for the quality of life. Jarrot has for several months been driving one of 10 experimental R5 electric cars built by Reneault and Electricite de France.

The minister likes to point out that, during the Second World War, he perfected an electric tricycle which he used for short trips.

For a country such as France, which must import its petroleum, and for large cities plagued by pollution, electric vehicles hold great promise. Easy to drive, they are quiet, cheap to maintain and non-polluting.

But the vehicles are relatively expensive and can travel only a short distance before their batteries have to be recharged.

The Citadine, the only electric car on the market, is a five-horsepower two-seater with a top speed of 40 miles an hour. Less than seven feet long, its eight 12-volt batteries must be charged for eight hours after about 50 miles.

The Citadine costs about $3,500.

To improve the vehicles, the government plans to increase its yearly research grant from about $1 million to $6 million this year and next.

A study recently submitted to the inter-ministerial committee on nature and the environment suggests 10 per cent of all cars in France could be electrically powered in about 15 years.

To give the vehicles a longer lasting power source, greater speed and more carrying capacity, a 15-year research program is proposed.

Between now and 1982, emphasis would be placed on the construction of utility vehicles such as small trucks and buses. Little change would be made to the present propulsion system, based on lead batteries.

Several thousand such vehicles could be built each year, says the study presented to the government.

From 1982 to 1990, research emphasis would shift to the power source, exploring performance improvements to be found in zinc-nickel batteries or zinc-air generators.

Modified thus, a car such as the Renault could roll 125 miles at slightly less than 60 miles an hour before having to feed its batteries at the plug.

These vehicles, ideal for use as taxis in urban areas, could be sold at the rate of about 10,000 a year, the study forecasts.

After 1990, work would proceed on refining and marketing a motor weighing only one-third as much as the present 600-pound model. The lighter motor would allow greater speed and mileage.

It is thought that numerous nuclear power stations, slated to be built in the 1980s, could provide enough electricity for the nightly recharging of the batteries in the "Kilowatt car."

Firms 'Not Second Class'

TORONTO (CP) — Douglas Marrs, recently-appointed president of Westinghouse Canada Ltd. of Hamilton, takes exception to the attitude that multinational corporations are second-class citizens.

"There is a growing tendency to categorize companies as being Canadian or not Canadian," Marrs said in an interview.

"If you are not, you tend to be suspect. This bothers me a great deal."

Marrs' firm is 76-per-cent owned by Westinghouse Electric Corp. of Pittsburgh, a multinational corporation based in the United States.

"I am a Canadian and have a strong interest in pursuing the objectives Canadians have for achieving independence. Most of our 10,500 employees are Canadian, and we are running a business that in many ways has been of some benefit to the whole country, by and large.

"We don't want to be treated as second-class citizens, and we don't want to be judged rigidly on a monetary base only. Any company should be judged on how it performs and conducts itself in the country, and on how it contributes to the over-all objectives of Canada.

With a continued strong demand for heavy equipment, Westinghouse Canada is budgeting $12 million for capital expenditure this year, compared with $8 million spent in 1974.

He Waited 13 Years for Ticket Home

YELLOWKNIFE, N.W.T. (CP) — An Eskimo man who was released from a Manitoba mental home after 23 years spent 13 of those years just waiting for officials to find a home for him in the Northwest Territories.

Paul Nukkerweenar was 24 when he was arrested for allegedly shooting another Eskimo whom he believed was having an affair with his wife. Nukkerweenar was judged unfit to stand trail and committed to the Selkirk Mental Health Centre in 1951 where he stayed until his release last November.

Bob Creasy, now an employee of the territorial government but then employed at the Selkirk home, said the charge against Nukkerweenar was withdrawn in 1961 and since then the home has been trying to return him to his native Keewatin district.

"We needed some situation that would permit his gradual re-entry to the north," Creasy said.

"Whether a person is ill or not you don't plunk him back into the north 10 years later.

"The real breakthrough was being able to persuade the corrections people this man would be appropriate for them to have."

Nukkerweenar, whose wife has remarried and whose children have grown up without him, now is readjusting to the north at the Baffin Island Correctional Centre where he is free to come and go but where he is still far from Eskimos who speak his Keewatin dialect.

Jim Bretton said the man will soon be ready to enter a foster home, if one can be found.

"He spent the whole day around here smiling and chuckling," Bretton said.

"As far as we're concerned he's making great strides here. He's learning to deal with money and learning the language again because his ability to speak it had diminished through lack of use."

The case was brought to light this week on the floor of the territorial legislature by the council member for the Eastern Arctic, Bryan Pearson.

The territorial government has begun an investigation to determine if there are other similar cases and the N.W.T. mental health association has called for a federal inquiry.

A spokesman for the Selkirk hospital said the institution is not to blame.

"Our hands are extremely clean on this one.

"For many years we have been trying to get him back up north. The only assurance we wanted was that he had some place to go."

'Foreign Invasion' Was Lost

LODI, Italy—It looked like a foreign invasion and the Italian Army acted accordingly. But in the end the Iranian Army aviators came out unscathed.

Police said two helicopters the Iranian army purchased from Italy's Augusta Company got lost in thick fog Friday on their way to the Port of Brindisi, where they were to be loaded on an Iranian ship.

The Iranian crews—10 men on one helicopter and six on the other—made emergency landings in the Lodi area. One touched down a short distance from an oil refinery.

Residents, alarmed by the landings and unable to understand what the Iranians were saying, called police and the army.

Italian soldiers with submachine guns surrounded the helicopters. The Iranians, by now somewhat worried, barricaded themselves inside and refused to budge.

It was some time before the army found an interpreter and the language barrier was broken.

Officials said the helicopters would be taken to Brindisi by truck.

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz.—Police said a man donned a security guard's uniform, placed an "out of order" sign on the night depository at a local bank, then stood back and waited. Seven persons gave Leslie Strain, 39, their deposits Friday night before a depositer became suspicious and called police.

Police said Strain was arrested without incident in front of the continental bank on suspicion of theft.

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif.—U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger had a long visit with his old boss, former president Richard Nixon, Friday before beginning a private weekend in Palm Springs, Calif.

It was the first face-to-face meeting between the two since Nixon resigned the presidency, although Kissinger has spoken to him several times by telephone.

KAMPALA—Gen. Idi Amin celebrated the fourth anniversary of his seizure of power in Uganda today and refused to return civilian rule to the East African nationin the near future.

"I am not able at this moment to hand back the reins of government to politicians because corruption is still rampant among civilians and we . . . cannot deliver the affairs of state into the hands of corrupt politicians," Amin said.

OTTAWA—Commodore Daniel Nicolas Mainguy, 43, of Victoria, director-general of postings and careers for officers, has assumed duties as commander of the NATO Standing Naval Force Atlantic, the defence department announced Friday.

He succeeds Commodore G. M. deRosenroll, 48, Edmonton and Calgary who has been hospitalized in England.

The force is made up of ships from NATO member countries and normally operates in the Atlantic.

OTTAWA—Prime Minister Trudeau's visit to The Hague has been moved ahead to Feb. 27-28 from March 10-11, his office announced Friday.

The change was requested by the Netherlands when it was found the original dates would have conflicted with a European Economic Community first ministers' conference.

LOS ANGELES—Larry Fine, 73, the frizzy-haired original member of the three Stooges comedy team, died Friday at the Motion Picture and Television Country Home and Hospital in suburban Woodland Hills. Home officials said death was due to a stroke.

Moe Holland, who was leader of the Stooges, is the only original member still living. The third original member was Moe's brother Jerry, known as Curly, who died in 1952.

The Stooges made 218 movie shorts over a 24-year period at Columbia Pictures.

PUTTING ON THE DOG . . .

STUTTGART, West Germany (UPI) — Gen. Alexander Haig has decided to pay the U.S. government $46.92 for driving his mongrel dog Duncan 95 miles in a chauffered limousine.

American GIs were outraged when the general's dog, a beagle and dachsund breed, was transported in an army sedan with a uniformed chauffeur from the Frankfort airport to Haig's Stuttgart headquarters.

"The cost has been calculated as $46.92," the spokesman said.

Alta. Housing Head Held in $2M Loan

EDMONTON (CP) — An improperly-borrowed loan by the Alberta Housing Corp. in 1969 will cost the AHC and the Alberta government more than $2 million in excess of what they should have paid, says a report tabled in the legislature Friday.

The report, by Mr. Justice J. M. Cairns of Alberta Supreme Court, is the result of weeks of testimony in a judicial inquiry investigating the crown corporation's affairs.

Several hours after the report was made public two criminal charges, each carrying a maximum sentence of five years in prison, were laid against Bob Orysiuk, former executive director of the AHC, an RCMP spokesman said.

Orysiuk has been charged with acceptance of a benefit while being a government official and breach of trust while being a government official and will appear in Alberta provincial court Tuesday.

The report said the loan, secured by Orysiuk, through a German bank, would have cost two per cent more in interest . . . or $660,000 over what it would have cost if (it) had been made through legitimate channels in Canada."

But the Deutschmark has been revalued, and repaying the loan will cost even more, it added.

Had the loan been obtained properly, the AHC would have also received $198,000 which was split between Orysiuk and others who helped find the loan.

"There was no conceivable justification for Orysiuk arranging this loan with a real estate agent in Montreal (Victor Farkas) and through him, in Germany, unless it was for the obvious reason that he had a personal interest in so doing—which I have no doubt was the fact," Mr. Justice Cairns said.

Sherwood Named By Rec Group

North Saanich Ald. Eric Sherwood was elected chairman of the Saanich Peninsula Recreation Committee at its first meeting Wednesday.

The 16-member committee, responsible for setting up recreation programs on the Peninsula and determining the need for a recreation facility, voted to advertise throughout western Canada for a recreation director.

Food Council Shutdown Predicted

VANCOUVER (CP) — Two members of the B.C. Food Council have said the council is not fulfilling its role and probably will be disbanded.

The Advisory council has been criticized by Agriculture Minister Dave Stupich, who threatened earlier this week to dissolve the group unless it could find some common ground on which to function as a unit.

"We haven't recommended anything very effective to him (Mr. Stupich)," Ada Brown said. "This is one of the criticisms that he has and rightly so."

Brown, president of the B.C. branch of the Canadian Consumers' Association, said the council officially was formed about two years ago and members, appointed by Stupich, serve on a voluntary basis.

The council is delegated to investigate food production, advise the agriculture minister on legislation and to serve as a communication centre for those involved in and affected by the agriculture industry.

Brown and Ruth Lotzkar, past president of the Consumers' Association and a council member, said they consistently are outvoted on the council by industry representatives.

Brown said she and Lotzkar earlier tried to resign but were convinced to reconsider by Stupich.

Auto Jobless Up to Third

DETROIT (AP) — More than one-third of the U.S.'s auto workers will be on layoffs next week as the manufacturers reshuffle production schedules because of falling sales.

Nearly 248,000 of the industry's 687,000 hourly employees will be off the job starting Monday, an increase of 20,000 from this week. About 185,000 are on indefinite furloughs.

The recently-offered cash rebates on some new models helped push mid-January car sales over the low early-January levels. But deliveries in the latest 10-day period were down 15 per cent from the year before to their slowest pace in 14 years.

Worsening sales have left dealers with a record 100-day inventory of unsold models. The burgeoning supply, estimated at 1.7 million cars, has risen in the last three months despite efforts by the firms to trim their stockpiles through shutdowns and layoffs.

The companies are closing 16 assembly operations next week, compared with 11 this week, when 228,000 workers were off the job.

Ford Motor Co. said Friday it is recalling 20,650 workers Monday who were on temporary layoff this week. At the same time Ford is placing another 43,450 on layoff, raising its temporary furloughs to 44,550.

Ford also is laying off another 1,725 hourly workers indefinitely, raising open-ended layoffs to 33,125.

Ford is closing five car operations, four truck lines and eight of its 46 manufacturing plants next week.

In all, 77,675 of Ford's 177,000 hourly employees, or 44 per cent of its blue-collar work force, will be off the job Monday.

About 106,000 workers, or 30 per cent of General Motors' 370,000-member hourly work force will be off the job next week when the firm keeps three car plants shut. GM said 6,000 workers will be on temporary layoffs for the week, compared with 10,455 this week, and an estimated 100,000 workers will be on open-ended furloughs.

More than half of Chrysler's 117,000 workers are scheduled for layoffs next week when the firm will have three car plants shut down.

Chrysler layoffs starting Monday will total 62,950, including 51,000 on indefinite furlough.

American Motors is laying off 450 workers in the company's first indefinite layoffs since the sales slump began 16 months ago. In addition, AMC is closing its Brampton, Ont., car plant for two weeks starting Monday and temporarily laying off 850 workers there. AMC, the smallest of the four auto makers, has 23,000 hourly employees.

Drug Settlement

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A 10-year-old boy who suffered brain damage from insulin overdose was awarded $900,000 Thursday from a drug store that sold his parents wrong-size syringes. Jeffrey Hook received the award in a court settlement with White Cross Stores Inc.

LEAD PERILS CITED

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — A geochemist here says industrialization has created an invisible, potentially dangerous film of lead that coats the earth and nearly everything on it.

"If we had lead-sensitive spectacles we could see the streets brilliantly painted with lead," says Dr. Clair Patterson of Californai Institute of Technology.

Patterson said in an interview Thursday that minute particles of lead from leaded automobile gasoline and industry coat sidewalks, foliage, buildings, automobiles, clothing, food tnd human bodies. Were the lead visible, "you would see swirling clouds of it hovering over freeways and streets," he said.

Patterson noted that most people do not have the classic symptoms of lead poisoning — irritability and hallucinations that sometimes lead to permanent brain damage. But he said humans may have symptoms of lead poisoning as yet unrecognized.

Patterson said more than 80 per cent of the lead in grass and mice is of industrial origin. In populous areas, 99 per cent of the lead is from industrial sources.

Much of the lead in bodies is from food. He said that by the time tuna reaches the dinner plate, processing has added 1,000 times more lead to it than when it was in the ocean. He said industrial lead also gets into milk, flour, beef, orange juice and other foods.

He said if all the automobiles in the world stopped burning leaded gasoline instantly, lead contamination would drop in 30 days. But he said he believes it would take centuries to get rid of the pollution.

Airclub To Operate Until Review

Airclub International, the American air tour firm which was supposed to close down Jan. 15, will now be allowed to operate pending a review of the company's "merits."

The ninth U.S. Court of Appeals in San Francisco ordered this week that the club be granted a temporary operating certificate by the Federal Aviation Administration until after a full hearing of the company's dispute with the FAA.

The FAA earlier refused to grant Airclub the safety certificate it needed to operate its planes because the Civil Aeronautics Board has charged that the company was operating as a common carrier with scheduled flights open to anybody, rather than as an air charter firm.

The B.C. consumer services department estimated that half of Airclub's member's live in B.C. and asked for assurances from the company that if the airline closed Jan. 15, money paid out by British Columbians would be refunded.

TREE CARE CORNER

FRUIT TREES

Both the fruit and flowering varieties are an asset to any garden if they are properly cared for. Ideally they should be pruned annually from the time they are first planted. This is a relatively inexpensive operation (about $8.00 for an average tree) but you should be sure the person carrying out this work is qualified to do so. If in doubt, get advice BEFORE allowing the work to be done.

We've been giving free estimates and advice on feeding, pruning, pest control and other problems related to fruit trees for the past 12 years. If we may be of service please call us.

CONDOMINIUM HOMES for the DISCERNING

THE WRONG TIME TO BUY?

Remember three years ago (and three years before that)? The market was bad, money was tight and the general economy appeared to be such that nobody wanted to invest in a home?

Well, we survived those two crises (and the ones before them) and here we are facing similar times. Things may be a bit rough now, but are they any worse than we've faced and overcome before? So don't be of faint heart. Already the worm is beginning to turn . . for the better. The next few months may very well find the sun shining and the storm clouds behind us.

WHAT WILL A CONDOMINIUM HOME COST NEXT YEAR?

While most people are watching and waiting, the discerning are buying . . . at today's prices. Everything will probably increase in cost over the next six months or so including homes. They always have and always will. After all, try and think of a better investment in Victoria than a home. And the increase in the price of that home (the one you bought today) takes care of a lot of interest. So chances are, if you buy today, a year from now you'll pat yourself on the back for being so bright. After all, there are an awful lot of people who are very happy that they bought three years ago in that economy and three years before that. What do you suppose those condominium homes are worth today.

A WORD ABOUT SPENCER CASTLE

Today there's a private community of exquisite condominium homes called Spencer Castle. These are expensively finished and built. Priced from $63,900 to $74,500 they're located high above Victoria's natural beauty on their own four and a half acre estate of landscaped grounds.

The historic castle which was the Spencer home has been retained as the guest house and entertainment centre for the condominium owners . . . only the heated, enclosed swimming pool and saunas has been added to complete the lifestyle.

As befits the price and this never-to-be duplicated location, the craftsmanship and detail in the construction of these new condominiums are extraordinary. The builders, Danzo and Franco have always demanded and achieved the highest quality in their condominiums — a fact borne out by the satisfied owners of suites in the first phase and those owners already enjoying their condominium homes in this second phase.

Phase II of Spencer Castle, like Phase I, is constructed of reinforced concrete and reinforced block and beam. It provides underground parking for each suite and additional parking area. The suites range in size from 1345 and 1430 square feet. They feature two bedrooms, two four piece vanity bathrooms and a full range of appliances — washer, dryer, range with self-cleaning oven, frost free refrigerator, dishwasher, garbage disposal unit. Each condominium home has its own distinctive panoramic view of the city, the mountains, the ocean. The detailing and quality materials from the luxurious carpeting throughout to the extensive use of vinyl wallpaper are worthy of the finest homes in British Columbia.

HIGH INTEREST RATES?

Sure, interest rates are high but with home ownership, you have a non-taxable capital gain when you sell. And what about the appreciation on your condominium home in one or two years as opposed to buying a comparable one at that time?

A lot of people are worrying about a couple of percentage points of interest when they should be considering the increased costs of construction a year or two hence. What will it cost to build this quality condominium home in the future.

What this adds up to is a new condominium home that you should be taking advantage of today. Boil it all down and there's no reason whatsoever to be hesitant about considering Spencer Castle.

MAYBE IT'S NOT THE WRONG TIME TO BUY?

So maybe times aren't as bad as they seem. It might just be a very wise time to buy at Spencer Castle. We don't think you'll find these condominium homes duplicated at these prices anywhere. And remember . . . Spencer Castle Condominiums are in a never-to-be duplicated location — on the highest point of land in the City of Victoria with over four and a half acres of their own grounds. Come and see them — SPENCER CASTLE — CONDOMINIUM HOMES BUILT FOR THE DISCERNING . . . a wise decision . . . now!

EXECUTIVES FACE JAIL

3M Hit Over Slush Funds

WASHINGTON (WP) — The Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Co. and two of its board members have been indicted on criminal income-tax charges involving a secret $634,000 slush fund maintained to make illegal campaign contributions.

For the corporate officers involved, the IRS investigations represent a large jump in the seriousness of the alleged offence.

A number of corporations and individuals have pleaded guilty and been fined for making illegal campaign contributions, but few defendants have gone to jail, and nobody for as much as a year.

Tax violations such as those alleged in the 3M indictment, by contrast, are felonies carrying jail terms of up to five years by conspiracy and three years for filing a false tax return.

In the 3M case the government claimed that the two corporate officers had conspired with an independent auditor to disguise political contributions by listing them on company books as insurance payments or legal fees.

The indictment charged that the company established a Swiss bank account to handle the money and retained a Swiss lawyer, who billed the company for services not performed.

The money was then returned to the company and kept in the office safe of one of the executives.

Named in the indictment besides the company itself were Bert Cross, 69, the company's chief executive officer from 1963 through 1970 and a director since 1970, and Irwin Hansen, 60, the company's former vice-president for finance and a director since 1968.

Neither could be reached for comment Friday.

The auditor, Burgess Geib of the firm of Haskins and Sells, died in 1972. He was named as an unindicted co-conspirator.

The company has already admitted to the bare outlines of the government's case — but not the criminal charge.

On Dec. 31, 1974, the company notified the Securities and Exchange Commission that from 1963 to 1973 it maintained the secret political fund. It said that $634,000 was transferred to the fund through bogus bookkeeping procedures and that all but $167,500 of the money was spent.

Patients Get The Point

WINNIPEG (CP) — Acupuncture treatments apparently brought relief to more than 80 per cent of chronic-pain victims in a scientific study, says Dr Charles Godfrey, director of rehabilitation Hospital.

However, the results of the study, funded by the Ontario health department, are still preliminary and are not irrefutable proof of acupuncture's effectiveness, Dr. Godfrey told reporters Thursday at the annual meeting of the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons.

The study was conducted recently at Wellesley Hospital with 91 patients who had been suffering from chronic pain in elbows, shoulders, lower backs, hips and knees.

Following at least three sessions with acupuncturists, 82 per cent reported relief of pain, 61 per cent reported considerable and lasting relief and 30 per cent very significant relief.

In all successful cases, the pain relief lasted at least 48 hours.

Dr. Godfrey said the researchers made various attempts to rule out the possibility that suggestibility, hypnosis or the chrisma of the acupuncturist would effect the results.

This was done by having independent assessors estimate the degree of pain relief as well as relying on the subject's own personal assessments of their recovery.

While acupuncture was given at the classical "acupuncture points," half the subjects were given acupuncture at the correct or valid points for their particular pain; while the others were given acupuncture at a point least likely to bring relief.

Epidemic Strikes

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — An influenza outbreak has become an epidemic here and tourists were advised Thursday to postpone their visits. Dr. George Dame, Pinellas County health director, estimated that 75,000 cases of the flu have been reported since mid-December. He said the 30th influenza death occurred Thursday.

Summer this Winter in Southern Arizona!
Winters in southern Arizona are ludicrously misnamed. The days are sunny and warm, generally in the high 60s or 70s. Just the right kind of weather to melt a Canadian winter.
PHOENIX! TUCSON! SCOTTSDALE! YUMA! Names that warm the spirit and heat the imagination. And each of these exciting (and SUNNY) resort cities offers an exceptionally wide variety of family vacation opportunities. Here can be found some of the finest golf and tennis facilities in the United States. And, many resorts with fine stables and scheduled rides over beautiful desert trails to breakfast, luncheon or dinner cookouts. Southern Arizona boasts water sports of all kinds and sightseeing among some of nature's wonders. Accommodations in southern Arizona range from modern mid-town hotels and motels to fabulous guest ranches and magnificent resorts. This winter, summer in southern Arizona!

Quick Profits Lead To Hong Kong Woes

HONG KONG (WP) — The British are currently in one of their periodic flaps over corruption and colonial exploitation in their last important jewel of empire, the Crown colony of Hong Kong.

Television viewers in Britain are being treated to two documentary specials on police corruption in Hong Kong, and the mass-circulation newspaper, the Daily Express, worked up a series of an ex-colonial cop who managed to amass through graft, more than $1 million.

Here in Hong Kong, where the crooked polceman's memoirs are also being published, the government is currently playing host to Lord Goronwy-Roberts — the parliamentary undersecretary for foreign and commonwealth affairs.

His visit has sent a collective shiver down the spines of some leading businessmen here, who fear that the Labor government in Britain may decide to reform some of the laxly followed labor laws here that have long been an embarrassment to the Labor Party.

Hong Kong lives on quick profits and cheap labor, without the government supervision with which businessmen must contend in most of the industrialized world.

London's right-wing Daily Express, in a recent editorial, protested that Britain was presiding over a gangster-like establishment in Hong Kong.

"At the heart of Hong Kong's diseased system of bribery and organized crime is the crooked policeman," the paper said.

"This is how the Mafia operates in America . . . that the same thing should happen in a British colony in a British-officered police force is a humilating reminder that no one is immune."

The records show that the British have never been immune to corruption in Hong King.

The city, with a population of 4.1 million, is 98 per cent Chinese. The British police officers form only the top layer.

As the former superintendent, Ernest Hung — the crooked cop whose memoirs are being serialized — explained: "The linchpin of every operation is the (Chinese) detective staff sergeant. He knows where every illegal piece of action is going on and at the same time he knows that he needs the cooperation of his superior officer if these places are not going to be knocked off. So once a deal has been completed, he arranges for a runner to pick up a percentage of the profits. Then he, in turn, pays off the senior officers in the police."

Hunt was convicted under section 10 of the prevention-of-bribery ordinance, which makes it a crime for a public employee to have wealth incommensurate with his salary unless his wealth can be adequately explained. Hunt served only eight months for his crime, and his memoirs admitting his corruption, with photographs of his new affluent life in Spain, have proved galling.

Officials admit that corruption is a major problem. "Kickbacks and bribes are common in every government department as well as in business, the press and even the church," said a government official.

In Hong Kong nearly everything goes. Profit is the colony's motor force, and it would be hard to find anywhere a form of capitalism less fettered by government regulations or by organized labor.

A booklet published recently in England said that Hong Kong with 40 per cent of the population engaged in manufacturing, ranked among the top 20 trading "nations." Yet Hong Kong has no elected legislature, no movement toward decolonization, no political parties, no maximum hours of work for males over 18, no unemployment insurance and insufficient child-labor regulation. "Many of the most elementary measures to protect factory workers have been rejected,'" the booklet charged.

The report was marred by inaccuracies and exaggerations, but there could be no denying that the rights of workers in Hong Kong was not something a labor government could boast about.

Whether the labor government will eventuallly introduce reforms here is an open question. In the past there have been similar flaps in Britain over Hong Kong, but little has been done.

CUPID'S ARROW FATAL

LONDON (CP) — Mulundu and Myrtle were lovers and love proved the death of them, Agence France-Presse reports.

Mulundu, aged 15, and five-year-old Myrtle, a pair of rare white rhinoceros, were found dead early this week in their cage at Whipsnade Zoo near London.

An autopsy shows Mulundu died of a heart attack while Myrtle, pinned down by her mate's two-ton weight, died of a fractured spine.

THE GREAT LITTER BASKET RIP-OFF

SURREY (CP) — Thieves here are scraping the bottom of the barrel — the litter barrel, that is.

Don Christian, secretary-treasurer for the local school board, told a trustees' meeting that litter barrels have had to be secured to posts or embedded in cement blocks to discourage thieves.

But even when the barrels are secured, Christian added, the litter problem is not solved. "It just keeps litter within a 10-foot radius of the cans," he lamented.

CALENDAR FOR THOSE WHO ARE DOING TIME

McNEIL ISLAND, Wash. (AP)—Don Quixote's warning that "God bears with the wicked . . . but not forever" is among the quotations in the 1975 calendar for time-watchers here.

The new McNeil Island prison calendar, commemorating such historic events as the Brinks Robbery and the St. Valentine's Day massacre, was late off the press this year but it is more popular than ever.

About 4,000 copies have been printed and sent to businessmen, politicians and others throughout the country as well as to prisoners here.

"There was a tremendous demand for it this year," Charlie McClellan, who edits the prison newspaper Island Lantern and the calendar, said. "We had press trouble and didn't get it printed until last week."

McClellan said the press run was up from 2,500 last year and copies went to some members of Congress, including members of a subcommittee on prisons.

One new entry on this year's edition of the calendar is May 29. It marks the 100th anniversary of the prison.

Other dates noted on the calendar include June 11, when Indians were ousted from Alcatraz in 1971, the Aug. 6, 1890, First Electrocution, the June 8, 1963, Great Train Heist in England, the end of the Attica, N.Y., prison riot Sept. 13, 1971, and the establishment of a federal prison furlough system, Dec. 1, 1973.

It also commemorates Guy Fawkes Day on Nov. 5.

Fawkes, an English conspirator, on Nov. 5, 1605, led a group which tried to blow up King James I and parliament to avenge the persecution of Roman Catholics.

Chinese Still Risk Being Sent Back From Hong Kong

HONG KONG (WP)—Forty-eight days have passed since the British authorities here began turning back refugees from China, but still they come.

So far 305 "illegal immigrants" have been handed back to the Chinese after having been apprehended trying to sneak into Hong Kong. No one knows how many more may have managed to evade British army, navy and police patrols, but authorities estimate that three or four illegals slip through undetected for every one who is caught.

For the people of neighboring Kwantung Province in China, the proximity of capitalist Hong Kong is a constant offer of escape from the regimentation, discipline and physical labor required in the new China.

The Chinese speak of breaking up "underground clubs" in Kwantung in which prohibited books, songs and stories are circulated in an attempt to "spread bourgeois ideology and the dissipated bourgeois way of life."

For seven years previously it had been British policy to turn a blind eye on illegal immigration from China. Word is now reportedly spreading in Kwantung that the illegals are being turned back, but many are still willing to take a chance.

During the cold months, most come by boat or risk an overland crossing, but some are still willing to try the long swim across Deep Bay and Mirs Bay on either side of the British colony.

The swim is particularly dangerous, because sharks have learned to wait for the frequent crossings, but the land route can be dangerous, too. One illegal immigrant is now being held in a British hospital, according to government sources, recovering from the bites of the guard dogs on the Chinese side of the frontier.

HIS STORY DIDN'T HOLD UP

CENTRAL ISLIP, N.Y. (UPI) — A five-foot one-inch teen-aged would-be robber failed to impress the manager of a Central Islip bank.

Suffolk County police said a man about 16 years old, with a paper bag in one hand and the other in his pocket, entered the Flushing Federal Savings and Loan Branch at Wheeler Road shortly before noon.

He walked up to manager Helen Saletel and announced: "This is a stickup."

Salatel replied: "You've got to be kidding."

The robber said, "I'm not kidding, this is a stickup."

"Okay," she replied, "stand still while I take your picture."

"Gee whiz," he muttered in disgust, "you can't even rob a bank anymore."

With that he turned and walked from the bank.

Fares do not include $2.00 Frankfurt airport departure tax.

Balance of your fare is due at least 60 days before departure.

CANCELLATION

In the event you have to cancel your flight booking any time prior to departure, you automatically forfeit your $50 deposit. Any balance of the fare which has been paid will be refunded by Intervac.

For an additional $6 per passenger, you can purchase Intervac's CHARTER FARE PROTECTION INSURANCE which protects you under most circumstances if your travel plans are necessarily and unavoidably cancelled due to causes beyond your control. The INTERVAC CHARTER FARE PROTECTION INSURANCE will refund the $50 cancellation charge, and in addition will ensure your travel home (point of departure) if you are unable to return to Canada due to sickness, injury or death.

All flights depart from, and return to, Vancouver International Airport. Arrivals and departures in Britain and Europe are at Gatwick (London), Prestwick, Schiphol (Amsterdam), and Frankfurt Main airports, depending on destination.

Tickets are valid only for flights purchased and cannot be exchanged for other flights.

Infants under 2 carried free of charge.

An additional $5 to cover the Canadian Transportation Tax must be paid at the time of final payment.

All flights governed by the Advance Booking Charter provisions of the Canadian Transport Commission, and approved by the Air Transport Committee.

It's Brains Not Brawn That Makes the Bouncer . . .

TORONTO (CP) — They come in all shapes and sizes and have different titles but Toronto bouncers agree it is brains rather than brawn which make a successful bouncer.

Mike Potter, 23, a greeter at El Mocambo, said "to get along in this trade you've got to be a regular Kissinger."

"You must never blow your cool and you soon learn that you can do more with honey than with muscles."

At the Nickelodeon Room of Friar's Tavern, Martha Harding, a 65-year-old, Grey-haired woman known to the regular patrons as "Aunt Martha", is the bouncer.

To those that create a disturbance, she says "You surely would never pick a fight with a nice old lady like me," and then orders them a cab.

The Brunswick's Donny Sinclair, 53, said "in this business you've gotta use humor and finesse when giving the bum's rush to the odd customer too deep in the sauce."

Mr. Sinclair, a four-foot, four-inch midget, added that "because of my size, who would dare take a swing at me?"

Russ (Twinkle Toes) Stevenson, 32, one of two bouncers at Le Coq d'Or, said "Kung Fu comes in handy when friendly persuasion doesn't work."

His partner, Lee (Grasshopper) Sheridan, 38, said regular customers are not the ones that create a nuisance. He said many of the regulars are "lonely rooming-house lodgers and they consider the club a home away from home."

Being built like a weight-lifter has its advantages and disadvantages for two other bouncers.

Jim (Killer) Conroy, 45, a former professional wrestler and now bouncer at Kelly's, said, "It's like you're in one of those cowboy movies, where you have a reputation for being the fastest gun in the West."

With that kind of reputation, "every pipsqueak in a saloon wants to take a shot at you." But he gives them his meanest look and they back off.

Howard (Baldy) Chard, 50, a former heavyweight boxer and now part-time bouncer at the Gerrard House Tavern, is acknowledged by most other bounchers to be the toughest in the business.

Tavern owners intimidated by gangs of hooligans call him in at a free-lance hazard pay of $150 a night to restore order.

Yet Mr. Chard agrees it is "tact, not toughness, that pays off in the bouncing profession."

"You gotta keep using the old psychology," he said.

Like every other Toronto bouncer, he finds drunken women the most difficult to handle.

"When they're deep in the sauce, some ladies develop a tramp' earthy vocabulary you wouldn't believe."

Mr. Chard says bouncing can be lucrative. He recently acquired his own discotheque.

Treasure Ship Found Off U.K.

Times News Services

LONDON — A British diving team has located the wreck of a British man of war carrying priceless Greek and Roman statuary whose recovery might "set the art world by the ears."

The ship, HMS Colossus, ran into a storm and sank in the Isles of Scilly off England's southwest tip in 1798.

Crates aboard the warship contained mostly Greek vases of the 5th and 4th centuries B.C. There were also some large marble friezes, and probably terra cotta and bronzes, and perhaps some jewelry dug up around Naples, Italy.

"This is potentially the most exciting find of my life," said Roland Morris, a Penzance restaurant owner and salvage specialist who has brought up artifacts and Spanish loot from other ships wrecked off Britain's coastline.

Morris said his team found the wreck last August after 171 hours of diving time but kept it secret until now to prevent "pirate divers" from interfering with the project. He did not reveal the precise location of the Colossus but it went down off the island of Sampson in the Scillies.

"I must make it clear that we do not know exactly what is down there," Morris said. "But contemporary records offer a strong prima-facie case for supposing the Hamilton marbles will set the art world by the ears."

The marbles were collected by Sir William Hamilton, British envoy to Naples and noted art specialist of his time. He was also the husband of Lady Emma Hamilton, mistress of Lord Nelson.

He shipped the marbles to England on the 1,610-ton Colossus which on Dec. 7, 1798, anchored near Sampson Island to ride out the storm.

Three nights later the Colossus was driven onto the rocks and her complement of 640, clung to rigging until saved.

When the gale abated salvage began but only part of the cargo had been removed when the vessel sank several days later.

The Hamilton collection was stowed at the bottom of the ship because it was so heavy it could serve as ballast.

Hugh Leggatt of Leggatt Bros., leading London art dealers, said news of the Morris find was "extremely exciting" and may be worth $2.3 million.

Not Guilty

MONTREAL (CP) — Yves Goacolou, 25, of Montreal was found not guilty Thursday of an armed robbery after spending eight months in jail before being freed on bail for Christmas. He was charged when $16,000 — the amount taken from a bank — was found in an abandoned, rented car. Goacolou's driver's licence was in the glove compartment.

The Illiterates At University

VANCOUVER (CP) — First-year University of British Columbia students who fail a diagnostic English composition test next September will be required to attend special composition workshops in addition to regular English classes.

The UBC Senate approved the new workshop program after it was revealed last week that almost 40 per cent of all first-year English students at UBC failed a basic composition test taken before Christmas and are "functional illiterates."

Dr. J. L. Wisenthal, chairman of the first-year English program said the recent exam results indicate that 35 to 40 per cent of the 3,500 English 100 students would need the number of classes set up will depend on the arts faculty budget.

Under the program approved by Senate, students failing the regular diagnostic test at the beginning of the school year would be required to attend a special two-hour workshop on English sentence structure, conventions of standard English usage and basic writing principles each week.

In addition to attending the non-credit workshops, the students would take the regular English 100 course and would receive no credit for that course without completing the special composition program.

Dr. Wisenthal said the poor exam showing does not mean that beginning English course standards will be lowered.

"We really couldn't let the standard drop any lower if we are to prepare the students for the reading and writing they must do for other courses in their university careers," he said.

He said that if all students needing extra assistance were to be enrolled in the new workshops, the expense would pose an "enormous burden" for the English department and the arts faculty.

Costs Climbing

MONTREAL (CP) — The cost of the James Bay hydro-electric project could reach $13 billion, Robert Boyd, president of the James Bay Energy Corp., said Thursday. The current estimated cost of $11.9 billion is based on an inflation rate of seven per cent and interest rates of 10 per cent over 12 years, Mr. Boyd said in a speech to a service club.

Prime Time Prejudice Preys on Innocence

When all day they've run your nerves ragged and pushed your patience to the extreme, there is nothing so satisfying and nothing that induces such peacefulness as the sight of small heads asleep on their pillows.

But then, there's a twitch and a cry and a head lifts and arms reach out. They reach out for comfort, for a hug and for a word that says there is nothing in the room to be afraid of. But you wonder.

And in the morning, not long after dawn,, a small girl comes to the table and, in much the same matter-of-fact way she might say "Pass the Rice Krispies", promptly announces: "I hate Indians, dad."

Of course, after choking on your toast, you ask why.

"Because they're bad, they kill people, that's why!" And she takes a large mouthful of Rice Krispies.

Her elder sister comes to the table and says that she, too, has had a bad dream about Indians. It's all a bit much, I mean twice in one morning and when you're not even properly awake.

"We went on a holiday, camping, but we were surrounded by Indians with sticks with fire on them and they killed us all," she explained quite pleasantly. "But then they rode away and we all got up and when the Indians came back we shot them all."

Charming. Straight from the mouths of babes. But someone put the thoughts in there. And later I discovered they had been watching an episode of Bonanza the afternoon before.

"And this man's wife was killed by the Indians," a tear trickles down her cheek as she thinks again of it. "They hit her right in the head with a spear and she died . . . it was so sad." I suspect it was, in fact, an arrow. But she's right, it is sad. And it's sad that this sort of show can be seen during children's watching time.

Series like Bonanza were originally conceived as adult fare and were shown during "prime time." But now, Westerns like The Monroes (a bloody series involving Indians and settlers until recently shown regularly on Channel 12), the Virginian, High Chaparal and Bonanza can all be seen by little eyes in the early evening hours.

Bonanza, in fact, is now directly aimed at children, being shown straight after the Brady Bunch at 4:30 p.m. five days a week on Channel 4.

What is shown in films is just the same as you read in history books, says Audrey Sampson, secretary-treasurer of the Tsartlip Indian Band on the Saanich Peninsula. "You never read of Indians doing good; they're always doing bad," says Mrs Sampson.

"The trouble is that so many of the younger kids are not exposed enough to the Indian way of life and only things like demonstrations are blown up on TV," she adds.

Audrey, a mother of five children who, she says, are often called things like "wagon burners", "totem poles" and "cigar-smoking Indians" by their non-native classmates, says the Education Department should hire Indians as resourse people to go around the schools and talk to students about Indian culture and about what Indians are doing today.

"It's a lot harder for an Indian person to go out into a community than for a white person," Mrs. Sampson says. "They are forever being called down and when one Indian makes a mistake, the whole race is generalized."

"The only way children can be helped to overcome the wrong attitudes they learn from books and movies is to expose them to Indian people and show them the beautiful side of Indian life."

I talked as well to Phillip Paul, director of research at the Indian Land Claims Centre on McKenzie Street, and he says "Western" films showing Indians as badmen are "pretty ignorant and are sowing the seeeds of discrimination."

"Of course this is part of the historical problem of the Indian people," Paul added. "They've never been given recognition of anything worthwhile and have always been portrayed as savages. And still today, they aren't considered to have any culture worth preserving."

But Paul blamed the "attitudes of the parents" and said "these movies only portray what the parents feel. Children are impressive and are quick to pick up what their parents feel . . . they know of no other way to look at it."

Dr. Barbara Lane, an anthropologist specializing in the tribal culture of the Indian, is inclined to agree. "You could wipe out TV, you could close down all the channels and it wouldn't make one iota of difference," she says. "We tend to use television as something to blame . . . and then we don't have to look at ourselves. The problems are in the society in which we live."

Is there, then, no hope at all? Is there no hope for people who do care, like the man who told me his four-year-old son came to him one day and said out of the blue "Indians ARE bad aren't they dad?" And is there no hope for the Indians themselves that they will be accepted by society for what they are as individuals and not for what they are portrayed, erroneously, as having been a long time ago?

If there is hope, Phillip Paul doesn't hold much of it.

"Canada claims there is no discrimination," he says, "but there is and there always has been and there always will be until parents, and in fact all people, start changing their attitude."

EXPOSE CHILDREN to native people and they will overcome wrong attitudes picked up from books and movies, says Audrey Sampson, secretary-treasurer of the Tsartlip Indian Band on the Saanich Peninsula. (Max Low photos.)

Man, 28 Guilty Of Rape

A Supreme Court jury has found Remy Antoine Gatto, 28, guilty of the rape of a 20-year-old Saanich woman and of breaking into her apartment with the intent to commit rape.

The all-male jury delivered their verdict to Mr. Justice John Charles Bouck late Friday afternoon after deliberating four hours.

Bouck remanded Gatto to Jan. 31 when he said, he would hand down sentence, provided a presentence report, requested by defence counsel Harold Turnham, has been completed by then.

Both charges carry a maximum penalty of life in prison.

The courtroom was hushed as the jury foreman read the succinct verdict at 4:25 p.m.

Gatto, an immigrant from France, flushed momentarily then turned white and sat back in the prisoner's box looking straight ahead.

His wife, pregnant with their second child, broke into sobs.

The victim looked relieved and later as she left the courtroom leaned on her boyfriend's arm and sighed "It's over".

The two-day trial heard evidence from the victim who said Gatto burst through a window of her ground floor apartment just minutes after she had gone to bed Sept. 14.

She said Gatto struck her and told her to "shut up" or he'd kill her. He then raped her, she said.

Turnham contended, however, Gatto had stumbled through the window unintentionally and then tried to quieten the victim who was screaming.

Arrest Bares Arsenal

One of two young men police arrested Friday for the robbery of a grocery store employee told police he should have killed the victim because "I had a hunch he recognized me."

Victoria police Det. Edward James gave that evidence in provincial court this morning after Robin Wayne De Kelver, 21, of 4126 Birtles and George Earl Storry, 20, of no fixed address pleaded guilty before Judge Edmond St. Jorre to armed robbery of the Warehouse on Thursday.

The pair also pleaded guilty to possession of unregistered restricted weapons — including two 357 Magnum high powered revolvers and two .22 caliber pistols, one with a nine-inch barrel.

James said the weapons were located in a suitcase in the De Kelver residence which police searched at 1:40 p.m. Thursday.

Police also seized a .30 caliber M-1 semi-automatic carbine.

All of the guns were loaded, James said.

Neither DeKelver nor Storry were home at the time. James said they were arrested about an hour later as they returned to the Saanich residence. They offered no resistance.

However, Storry told the arresting officer if police had not got the guns first "I would have taken a few cops with me."

Police recovered $955 from the home and $355 found on De Kelver's possession, money the pair admitted was taken in the robbery of Robert Andrew Arnold, an employee of Wilson's Warehouse Food Market, 47 Songhees in Vic West, on Thursday night.

Arnold had just left the store and was carrying a night deposit bag containing, $4,008.95 when he was approached by two men brandishing revolvers and wearing nylon stockings over their heads.

They ordered Arnold to crawl down a bank leading to the water's edge and wait there until they had gone.

James said Storry told police, "I should have killed Arnold . . . I had a hunch he recognized me."

James told the court the pair sorted out the $2,600 cash in bag from the remaining cheques and Chargex slips which they placed back in the bag and threw into the Gorge.

They spent $908 of the take before they were arrested.

James said the four revolvers had been stolen from Walter's Radio and TV in Masset, Queen Charlotte Islands Dec. 18.

Eleven hand guns and 1,500 rounds of ammunition were taken in the break-in.

James said about 700 rounds of ammunition were found in the DeKelver house.

Prosecutor Peter Birkett said Storry had a criminal record as a juvenile and DeKelver had convictions in the past two years for driving infractions and possession of a narcotic.

St. Jorre remanded the pair in custody to Feb. 7 for a presentence report and sentencing.

Tank Relocation Threatens Park —Regional Reps

By HUMPHRY DAVY
Times Staff

Two Capital Regional directors today charged Victoria Mayor Peter Pollen with making a last-minute attempt to scuttle a parkland plan in Esquimalt harbor.

Earl Pallister of Langford and Pat Massey of View Royal, said today they strongly oppose Pollen's proposal to relocate Inner Harbor oil tank installations on defence department property near historic Fort Rodd Hill.

The area, familiar to many Victorians, is a beautiful wooded area adjacent to the scenic access road to the park.

The surplus DND property involving more than 100 acres is presently being surveyed and is expected to be turned over to the federal parks branch within a month.

Pollen received the backing of Liberal Senator Ray Perrault after viewing the DND property by helicopter a week ago. He said he would try to get Defence Minister James Richardson to support Pollen's proposal.

The mayor said relocation of the tanks would remove an unsightly tank complex in the inner harbor and suggested the site might be used for housing.

"He (Pollen) has thrown a wrench in a Capital Regional Board plan to make the DND property public parkland," said Pallister. "This is a beautiful area."

"In supporting the Pollen proposal, Senator Perrault did not wait to hear the other side of the story. It is unfortunate he did not do so," he added.

PALLISTER
. . . blames Pollen

Pallister said that as long ago as the late 60s, the regional planning board was in favor of the DND property becoming parkland.

Massey suggested that the only reason for proposing relocation of the oil tanks was to remove visual pollution for the hotel complex to be constructed on the Bapco site.

"If you look at the map, you will see that the Bapco site faces the oil tanks," she said. "Most of the other buildings surrounding the harbor are commercial or office buildings."

She said removal of the tanks would not benefit Victoria taxpayers as most are not affected by the sight of the tanks.

"Who is going to pay for the relocation — the people of the capital region?" she asked. "This is a costly project."

Massey said Senator Perrault was "sold a bag of goods."

"I feel sorry for him," she said.

"I was shocked when I heard the mayor's proposal," she said. "I was told the DND land was safe and was going to be turned into parkland."

She also said she didn't put much faith in the mayor's suggestion that the Inner Harbor site could be used for residential.

"I may sound cynical," she added. "But I do recall that when the city expropriated or bought homes on Blanshard, it told the owners the land was wanted for low-cost housing.

"They only used a small section of the land for housing and the remainder for comercial use."

Provincial ecologist Bristol Foster said there is no need to move the tanks.

"This is an expensive proposition," he said. "An imaginative architect could get rid of the so-called eyesore, such as painting the tanks green, and landscaping them with Lombardy poplars.

Jack Rippengale, director of Fort Rodd Hill Historic Park, said it has been the plan of the federal parks branch to acquire sufficient DND land on either side of the access road "to protect for posterity" the scenic access to the park.

He said from the outset all parties agreed in principal to parks branch proposal.

Rippengale admitted he was upset by the mayor's proposal.

"As far as I'm concerned the land will become parkland for the use of the people of Greater Victoria, unless the plan is reversed by those higher up," he said.

Fire Death Accidental

District coroner Edmond St. Jorre has ruled Mrs. Melba Lucille Michaels, 56, died accidentally of asphyxiation when fire broke out in her room in the Drake Hotel Dec. 29.

He said tests showed the victim had a blood alcohol reading of .25 per cent and discounted speculation the woman, who was found collapsed near her bed, had been awakened by the fire and tried to escape.

St. Jorre made the comments after conducting an inquiry into the woman's death.

Mrs. Michaels was the only fatality in the $30,000 fire which sent five of the 35 hotel residents to hospital, four with smoke inhalation, one with a broken ankle received in jumping out of a window.

Firemen believe the fire was caused by careless use of smoking materials. Damage was confined to the area of Mrs. Michaels room and an adjacent second-floor landing.

Drug Programs Shift To Low Key Approach

By SUSAN RUTTAN
Times Staff

Drug education programs in schools don't work.

Most Victoria students and many educators suspected it all along, but now it's been confirmed by a Vancouver study of drug use among high school students.

The study, released this week by the Narcotic Addiction Foundation of B.C., shows students who didn't attend drug education courses were less likely to use drugs than students who did attend the courses.

Not only that, the students who attended the courses knew less about the non-medical use of drugs than students who never attended.

The findings are in line with the low-key approach to the drug problem now being taken by Greater Victoria, Saanich and Sooke school districts.

The trend here is simply to provide counselling for any student who seeks help or information about drugs.

"At one time drug education programs were kind of the thing to do," said Vic Thompson, head of curriculum for Greater Victoria district.

The disrict investigated a number of films about drugs, Thompson said, but it found many of them "pretty sordid and pretty grim."

Students were brought in to view the films before they were released to the schools.

"They laughed at them and ridiculed them so they were never sent out," Thompson said.

He said it's his impression that the drug situation in schools is not as serious as it once was.

"In the last year or so the attitudes in high schools have completely changed," he said and for the better.

Perhaps if you leave these things alone instead of rushing in with "cures" they right themselves in time, Thompson said.

Peter Thomas of Saanich School District said the district has abandoned its old approach of having police come into schools with displays of different drugs and descriptions of their effects.

"All you were doing was appealing to the ones who hadn't tried it yet," he said.

Saanich district has received a $11,055 grant from the Alcohol and Drug Commission to finance a different way of tackling the drug problem.

The district will begin next month a 16-week in-service training program to improve the communication skills of teachers.

The program won't deal directly with drugs, but is aimed at helping teachers to talk more freely with students about problems which may lead students to take drugs.

About 30 elementary and junior high school teachers are expected to take part, each devoting half a day a week to the program.

The Vancouver study showed 71 per cent of students who had attended 11 or more drug education classes had poor knowledge about the non-medical use of drugs.

None had good knowledge about drugs.

Of students tested who had never had a drug education program, 63 per cent were judged to have poor knowledge, 10 per cent to have good knowledge.

Students were asked what they considered the best source of information about non-medical use of drugs.

Of those that named school education programs, 79.9 per cent were judged to have poor knowledge of drugs.

Of those that chose the mass media, only 51.8 per cent were judged to have poor knowledge.

Students who had taken a drug education program in school were asked if they had used drugs in the six months prior to the 1974 survey.

Of those, 22.1 per cent had taken no drugs, not even tobacco or alcohol.

But 26.9 per cent of students who had had no drug education classes said they hadn't used drugs in the last six months.

"Educators should begin to analyse the informational and counselling aspects of their programs as it appears that present programs do not increase knowledgeability or decrease drug use," the researchers advised.

STRIKE DATE SUNDAY

City of Victoria outside workers will set a strike date at a meeting Sunday afternoon, the union spokesman said Friday.

Canadian Union of Public Employees Local 50 president Jim Walker said it will be decided at the meeting whether to walk out Monday or later in the week. "There will be as little warning as possible," he said.

A walkout by the outside workers would bring about a complete shutdown of all municipal services in Greater Victoria.

Municipalities and the Greater Victoria School Board involved in joint negotiations with CUPE locals throughout the area, have promised to lockout all union members if any single CUPE unit strikes.

The CUPE local representing the school board janitors Friday asked Gilmour to withdraw and will be in a walkout position by next Friday, after Gilmour has filed his report with Labor Minister Bill King.

Education Department Seeks UVic Team Aid

The provincial education department says its administration needs help.

Deputy education minister Jack Fleming has asked University of Victoria education dean George Pedersen to analyse the department and recommend changes.

Pedersen will work with three other UVic professors with experience in the same field.

"Essentially what he's asked us to do is an analysis of the organizational structure of the department of education," Pedersen said Friday.

Fleming specifically wants the group "to tell him where research and development should fit in," said the dean.

PEDERSEN
. . . heads study

The department's research and development division has been in turmoil since the firing of division head Dr. Stanley Knight last week.

Fleming has extended the probation of all division employees indefinitely, says one research officer, Maureen Stirling, who has quit because of the problems.

The three UVic professors who will assist Pedersen are Chris Hodgkinson, Arthur Kratzmann and Alex Bavelas.

The consultants may look at organizations outside the education department to compare administrative policy, said Pedersen.

Q: When I wash my cast iron frying pans, the paper towel is always left black. Why? Is it still safe to use the pans? — C.W.R.

A: It's just part of the finish coming off, and no danger is involved. But for longer wear and better use, avoid washing the pans whenever possible. If you are using grease in them as you should be, nothing should stick and a wiping with paper is sufficient cleaning.

Viking Rookies Doing Job

BOB PARRIS

By JIM CRERAR

"We've got a lot of freshmen in there," University of Victoria Viking basketball coach Gary taylor said. "We're asking them to play like seasoned veterans and they're doing it."

A crowd of more than 1,500 at the McKinnon Building saw exactly what Taylor meant Friday night when the Vikings overcame a 13-point deficit in the second half to beat Alberta Golden Bears 77-65 in a key Canada West University Athletic Association men's game.

The victory, their 11th in a row in league play, moved Vikings eight points ahead of second-place Alberta and completed a three-game sweep by UVic teams.

Earlier, the Vikettes had to overcome an Alberta Panda lead in the last six minutes for a 41-36 win that kept them two points ahead of second-place UBC Thunderettes in Canada West women's play.

In Friday's opener, UVic Jayvees beat Douglas College of Vancouver 84-54, getting 23 points from Drew Thomson. 16 from Tim McGovern and 13 from Dave Speed.

Three games tonight complete the weekend's basketball action at the McKinnon Building with the Jaycees playing at 4:30, the Vikettes and Pandas at 6:30 and Vikings and Bears at 8:30.

A check of the Viking roster shows six freshmen, including regulars Robbie Parris (Oak Bay), Doug Mosher (Mt. Doug) and Lorne Dakin (Terrace). There are three sophomores — Dave Mulcahy, Lee Edmondson and Bert Zethof — and two third-year men — Jim Duddridge and Pard Hogeweide.

Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Association rules permit five years of eligibility, so the future looks good for Taylor's team.

It didn't look particularly rosy at half time Friday when Vikings trailed 39-34 after Alberta ran in six points in the last two minutes. And it looked even dimmer when the Bears bumped their margin to 13 points five minutes into the second half.

At that point Vikings rallied, sparked by some great rebounding by Edmondson and Mulcahy and Parris' superb play under the boards. Mulcahy tied it at 51-51 with 10 minutes left, then put Vikings ahead for good with two more baskets, one a tip-in of Parris' driving layup.

Bears' first-half edge resulted from excellent outside shooting and effective drives by Wally Tollstrup and Doug Baker. Loose offensive play and turnovers hurt UVic in the first 20 minutes.

It was a different story in the final 15 minutes, however, as Vikings put together a more cohesive attack and tightened their defence, effectively cutting off the inside to Tollstrup and Baker. Bears also had to play cautiously in the late going because of fouls. They had 23 for the night compared to only seven by UVic.

Tollstrup, a perrenial Canada West all-star with Lethbridge Pronghorns, transferred this year to Alberta to study medicine. He didn't plan to play but the Bears, defending league champs, reactivated him midway through the season. He had 13 points Friday while Baker scored 18..

Mulcahy counted 16 points for the winners, shooting 54 per cent from the floor and grabbing six rebounds. Parris had 14 points and eight rebounds, Duddridge 12 points and 11 rebounds, Hogeweide 12 points and a 67-per cent field goal average and Edmondson 10 points on 50 per cent and seven rebounds.

Vikings shot 46 per cent from the floor, pulled down 31 rebounds and had 23 turnovers. Alberta was 40 per cent with 33 rebounds and 15 turnovers. The Bears had only two foul shots all night, Tollstrup taking them both and sinking one.

In the women's game, the Pandas subjected Vikettes to some tight checking but UVic coach Mike Gallo felt his girls were capable of playing better.

"We haven't played to our capabilities since Calgary was here before Christmas," Gallo said. "Really, we should be hitting our peak now. We never did play our type of game tonight."

Marg Mainwaring with 17 points and Lorna McHattie with 15 paced Vikettes. Tops for Pandas was Valerie Kallis with 11.

In other men's games Friday, UBC Thunderbirds downed Lethbridge 72-49 and Calgary Dinosaurs beat Saskatchewan Huskies 74-56.

UBC Thunderettes trounced Lethbridge 79-26 and Saskatchewan Huskiettes defeated Calgary Dinnies 57-44 in women's action.

In exhibition men's play in Great Falls, Mont., Simon Fraser Clansmen dropped a 94-53 decision to Great Falls College Argonauts.

Harper: There's That Name To Contend With

I suppose everyone remembers 1958. The Victoria Cougars were in last place in the four-team Western Hockey League; Bob Hunt had just defeated Harvey Hurd for the city men's badmipton title; Maureen Bray had done likewise to Sharon Whittaker for the ladies' title; Bill Prior, bless him, had led the Princess Mary Restaurant Vessel bowling team to the city title; Willie Shoemaker had just scored his 3,000th riding victory; the Manchester United football team had all but been wiped out in a plane crash; Victoria's Susan Butt was ranked No. 2 in tennis for Canada; men's suits were a bargain at Price and Smith for $29, $38 and $48; and you could buy the best cross-rib roast in town for just 65 cents a pound.

In curling, in Victoria they were singing the praises of icemaker Tony Gutoski of the Victoria Curling Club because he had just won the right to represent B.C. in the Brier which was also scheduled for the capital city.

Up at Duncan, people were slightly remorseful, but nonetheless pleased with themselves; because hadn't a young man named Glen Harper come within less than an eighth of an inch from being in Victoria for the Brier rather than Gutoski?

Yes he had, a three-game playoff taking place at Kamloops, Harper winning the first and Gutoski the last two.

The second game was the heartbreaker, Harper losing a measurement for the loss, third Bill Dunstan of the Gutoksi rink sweeping the rock barely far enough for a whisker-thin victory.

So that wast the miss that put Harper front and centre for the first time. His rink then consisted of Harvey Hodge at third, Fred Duncan at second and Shorty Berkey at lead. Then, in 1960, he struck again. Harder. He defeated Lyall Dagg in a playoff at Trial and was on his way to the Brier.

A Second at Brandon

By this time, Verne Kaspick had replaced Berkey on the front end and if success was only moderate, Harper did win three games. Three years later, Gary Merrett had taken over at second, but Hodge and Kaspick were still there; and Harper was in his second Brier. He had a run at the tankard, too, in Brandon, finishing with an 8-and-2 record and second place.

Since then he's devoted many hours to the game as a player, official, provincial executive, etc. and has taken two tries at the national mixed, even if he did come up empty each time.

Now this weekend, with the Island Consols taking place, that name is there again to contend with. Harper! And on his own Duncan ice, too.

Sure, he's got a different rink than in the 60s, but on paper maybe just as strong. Kaspick is still at lead, but now Gwyn Hughes is at third and Bert Oud at second. And if the Harper rink didn't exactly knock down the opposition in bonspiels and cashspiels on the mainland and the Island earlier this season, they were sharp enough to get the job done in the South Island. As for Harper, he may have been sharper than usual.

So the word is out to all Island finalists. Beware. Glen wants one more crack at the Brier and if he can get off the Island he just might have a better-than-usual shot too. Most of the big rinks were knocked off in the mainland countdown and as Glen once said: "Getting off the Island is just as tough as anywhere. If you make it, you know you have a chance."

A Tribute To Remember

Not that the opposition was likely to be scared off by any list of Harper's past feats. Curlers aren't like that. For instance, it isn't likely that the two youngest skips, Steve Skillings and Brad Clarke, who are both just 19, are overawed, even if they weren't even born when Harper took his first shot at the Consols. "That was with Ollie Panzer in 1954," he recalled. "We were kind of green and boy, did we get our first real lesson." Besides, Skillings handled him earlier this season. and so did some of the others. So he can be had.

If the youngsters are hot to trot, just as Harper was those many years ago, in a competition like this everyone's about on a par and often the breaks decide the winners. Still, may the better rinks emerge triumphant. But regardless of who wins, I'd like to think that if the losers could emulate what one writer said of Harper and his Duncan rink following that tough-luck loss to Gutoski in 1958, this playdown would be an even greater event.

Jim Tang of the Colonist, who was there, penned this tribute then, and it bears repeating.

"This would hardly be complete without something about the Duncan rink which lost in as heartbreaking fashion as it is possible to do. It's probable that no rink ever lost its Brier chance by a smaller margin and it's certain that no rink ever lost it with better grace."

It's simply the cut of the man. Then, and now.

Skillings Quartet Slips Past Clarke

By BILL WALKER

DUNCAN—The Steve Skillings rink was the lone Victoria entry to survive the first round of the Vancouver Island men's curling playdowns here Friday, and that was a squeaker.

Skillings, 19, edged Brad Clarke, a clubmate from Victoria Curling Club, 11-10, in a game that wasn't decided until the second last rock.

Skillings broke a 10-10 tie when Clarke was light attempting to draw around a short guard on his final stone with Skillings lying shot.

Bob Gallaugher, the other Victoria entry from Playland and the finalist in the Pacific Coast playdowns last year, lost to Duncan's Glen Harper, 9-7, in a game that actually was decided in the 11th end.

That was when Gallaugher missed two successive shots, enabling Harper to make a free draw for three and to give the Duncan skip a two-shot lead.

Gallaugher, who had taken a 7-6 lead in the 10th end, could get nothing started in the 12th and was run out of rocks.

Last eyar Gallaugher defeated Harper in the first round of the Island playdowns.

In the two other opening games, Norm Theissen of Nanaimo scored three-enders on the first and fourth ends and then hung on to defeat Ralph Boyd of Campbell River, 10-7, and Jack Taylor of Nanaimo staged a great comeback to edge Pat Horning of Comox Valley, 7-6.

Trailing 5-2 after six ends, Taylor secured his victory by scoring a duece on the seventh, giving up a single to Horning on the ninth, getting a single himslef on the 10th and then stealing successive singles on the 11th and 12th for the victory.

Skillings appeared to have matters fairly well under control against Clarke after scoring a four-ender on the sixth for 7-4 margin but Clarke took advantage of a Skillings last-rock miss on the 11th to get a free draw for three and tie the score at 10-10.

The Harper-Gallaugher match was a see-saw affair until the fateful 11th—fateful for Harper as Gallaugher had cracked a two on the 10th to take a 7-6 lead. Then came the two crucial Gallaugher misses.

Today's afternoon draw had Skillings meeting Thiessen, Taylor clashing with Harper, Clarke tangling with Boyd, and Horning meeting Gallaugher.

Third draw in the double-knockout competition is scheduled at 9 p.m. tonight. Sunday's draws, with two rinks to qualify for the Pacific Coast Curling Association final at the Arbutus Club in Vancouver next weekend, are at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m.

Manitoba Storm Keeps Cougars From Brandon

Victoria Cougars weren't expected to have any trouble travelling 1,200-plus miles today but they couldn't make it to a destination only 138 miles away on Friday.

The team's Western Canada Hockey League date in Brandon was postponed Friday when Cougars were turned back from Winnipeg at an RCMP roadblock.

Snow and high winds throughout southern Manitoba resulted in the closure of most highways in the area.

The game will be reschuduled at a later date.

The team didn't anticipate any problems in catching a flight out of Winnipeg for the return to Victoria and tonight's Memorial Arena meeting with Calgary Centennials.

Game time is 8:30.

Saskatchewan, Alberta and B.C.-based teams didn't have any trouble getting around Friday.

New Westminster Bruins edged the Pats 4-3 in Regina, Saskatoon Blades rallied to tie the Broncos 6-6 in Lethbridge and the Cents, opening a three-game B.C. jaunt, bowed 4-0 to the Chiefs in Kamloops.

Season ticket holders are asked to note that tonight's Calgary-Victoria game at Memorial Arena is event No. 21, and NOT No. 22 as erroneously advertised Friday.

Rookie Brian Henderson, 16, playing in only his second WCHL game, stole the spotlight in Kamloops by blanking the Cents .He made 22 saves while rival Larry Hendrick turned away 35 drives.

Henderson got all the support he needed from defenceman Terry McDonald, who scored three of the Kamloops goals. Allan Young fired the other.

In Regina, Steve Clippingdale's third-period goal stood up as the winner as the Bruins edged the Pats despite being outshot 43-33.

Spectrum Wins First

Spectrum won its first game of the season by trimming Belmont, 19-1, in the only inter-high school badminton league contest played Friday.

The victory moved Spectrum into fourth place, one point behind Esquimalt.

Matches between Oak Bay, Esquimalt, Mt. Douglas and Vic High, and St. Michael's-Norfolk Hosue and Claremont were postponed to next Friday.

Lakers Triumph Over Wolverines

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — Lake Cowichan Lakers, runaway leaders in the Lower Vancouver Island Big Six Hockey League, scored a narrow 4-3 exhibition victory over Anchorage Wolverines here Friday night.

Lakers complete their two-game Alaska visit with another game tongiht.

Goalie Rescues Oilers With 47-Stop Display

By The Canadian Press

Goaltender Ken Brown won Jacques Plante's approval Friday night.

The Thunder Bay, Ont., native stopped 47 shots to help Edmonton Oilers win 7-5 over Houston Aeros in a World Hockey Association game.

"Nobody could play better than that," said Plante after Brown had stopped 35 of 36 shots in the first two periods.

Plante, 46, dean of WHA goalies, said hard work was the key to the success of Brown, who shares goaltending chores with Plante and Chris Worthy.

"He's always asking, always trying to learn," said Plante. "He's got a great attitude and, I don't know why, he always plays well against Houston."

The Edmonton defence collapsed in the third period and he needed several good saves to enable the Oilers to move within two points of second-place Toronto Toros in the Canadian Division.

In other games, Vancouver Blazers edged Winnipeg 4-3, Minnesota Fighting Saints topped Toronto 7-5 and Phoenix Roadrunners stopped New England Whalers 4-1.

The Saints moved to within one point of third-place San Diego Mariners with their win against the Toros.

'Not Guilty' Plea

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. (AP) — Dave Forbes of Boston Bruins pleaded not guilty Friday to aggravated asssault in connection with an attack on a Minnesota North Stars player during a national Hockey League game.

The case was continued to May 19.

Forbes replied "not guilty" when asked by the court clerk how he pleaded to the charge handed down earlier this month by a county grand jury.

Forbes is charged with assaulting Minnesota's Henry Boucha in a game at Bloomington, Minn., Jan. 4. Witnesses said Forbes attacked Boucha as the pair left the penalty box, striking him above the right eye with the butt end of his stick.

Windup Pressure On North Shore

Victoria Scorpions will be tuning up for the playoffs when they meet North Shore Mountaineers in a pair of Dogwood Inter-City Senior "A" Men's Basketball League games this weekend at Central Junior High School.

The two games will be the final regular-season action for the Scorpions, who have clinched first place in their first year in the league.

Scorpions will also have two games at home if they qualify for the best-of-three final.

Along with capturing first place in the league, the Scorpions have three of the top ten scorers.

Bob Burrows leads the league, with 371 points in 14 games for a 26.5 per-game average, while Brian MacKenzie is fourth with 304 points and Dave Morgan seventh with 228 points.

Bob Lewis Gains Three Finals

Bob Lewis is going to be a busy man tonight at the Victoria City badminton tournament finals at the Racquet Club of Victoria.

Lewis will clash with Dave Howells for the men's singles title, team with Dennis Clement in the men's doubles final against John Meija and Warren Sweeney, and then join Lynn Lewis for the mixed double final against Howells and Diana Rogers.

Lewis earned the berth in the men's final Friday by defeating Ross Woodland, 15-7, 15-6, while Howells beat Meija, 13-18, 15-7, 15-5.

In men's doubles semi-finals Friday, Lewis and Clement won by default over Bob Hunt and Ed Hedley, while Meija and Sweeney beat Woodland and Howells, 15-6, 15-11.

In mixed doubles, the Lewis duo beat Clement and Pam Crisp, 15-1, 15-3, and in the other semi-final Howells and Rogers defeated Meija and Joan Wescott, 15-12, 15-7.

In semi-final action in women's doubles Friday, Liz Anne Ogden and Lynn Polson won over Anne Currie and Pam Crisp, 15-4, 15-11, and Joan Wescott and Maureen Hibberson trimmed Carol Meija and Renee Palmgren, 15-4, 15-5.

Competitors in the women's singles final will be Diana Rogers and Liz Anne Ogden, who won their semi-final matches last Monday.

Veterans' winners decided Thursday night were Maureen Hibberson and Mary Jean Smith in women's doubles, Frank Brix and Jack LeQuesne in men's doubles and Brix and Pam Crisp in mixed doubles.

Miller Worries Co-Leaders

TOM WATSON
. . . co-leader

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Neither Tom Watson nor Gene Littler, co-leaders after Friday's second round of the Bing Crosby National golf tournament, are about to write off the chances of Johnny Miller.

"You have to look back at Johnny," said Watson.

"Six shots," mused Littler.

"Miller can make that up."

And Miller, who failed to make a birdie as he slipped six strokes off the pace, concurred.

"I can still win," he said. "If I can put one of my good rounds on 'em, a 64 or 65, I've still got a good chance."

Miller, runaway record-setting winner in his first two tournaments this year at Phoenix and Tucson, Ariz., didn't have a single one-putt green in his first over-par round of the year — his 10th round of the tour.

Watson had a second-round 70 and a 139 total, five under par at the halfway mark of the tournament being played on three courses. Sunday's final round is at Pebble Beach.

Littler had a 71 to share first place with Watson, who also played his round Thursday at Pebble Beach.

Hubert Green and Larry Ziegler, who shared the first-round lead, fell back. Ziegler had a 74 at Pebble Beach and was tied at 140, one stroke off the lead, with Cesar Sanudo, who had a 71 at Cypress Point. Green had a 75 at Spyglass Hill and was alone at 141.

Miller and Jack Nicklaus, the man Miller is challenging as the game's No. 1 performer, each shot 74 at Spyglass Hill. Each had a 145 total.

George Knudson of Toronto was tied with Nicklaus and Miller at 145 after shooting a 72. A 78 gave Ben Kern of London, Ont., a 154.

Hale Irwin, the U.S. Open champion, had the best round, a 67 at Pebble Beach for a 144 total.

Arnold Palmer, Gary Player and Lee Trevino are not competing.

Leafs Stuck in Woods With Shaky Netminding

By The Canadian Press

Coach Red Kelly and his Toronto Maple Leafs aren't out of the woods yet.

The Leafs, recovered from the worst of their injury problems, appeared to be a National Hockey League team on the rise after they upset Montreal Canadiens last Saturday night.

But their grip on a playoff berth again began to look tenuous after they lost their third game in a row Friday night, 6-1 to California Golden Seals.

The Seals, making their first home appearance under new coach Bill McCreary, moved to within eight points of the thirdplace Leafs in the Adams Division.

A Toronto win would have given the Leafs a 12-point lead in the fight for the division's final playoff berth.

In Friday's only other NHL game, Vancouver Canucks topped Atlanta Flames 4-1.

Toronto's goaltending, frequently criticized when the Leafs were losing earlier this season, was weak again in the first two games of their three-game West Coast tour.

Doug Favell gave up eight goals to the Kings Thursday night in Los Angeles and was pulled in favor of Dune Wilson after the Seals took a 4-1 lead midway in Friday's second period.

Rookie Frank Spring, acquired from St. Louis Blues earlier this season, scored his first two NHL goals for the Seals.

The Leafs complete their western swing Sunday with a game in Vancouver.

The Canucks continued their recovery from a slump that threatened their lead in the Smythe Division. The win, their second in a row, gave them a five-point edge over secondplace Chicago Black Hawks.

It was the second win in 10 games for the Canucks. The loss was the third at home for the Flames.

Don Lever scored a pair of goals for the Canucks, including what turned out to be the winner on a second-period power play.

A game at Montreal between Buffalo Sabres, leaders of the Adams Division, and the Canadiens, who trail first-place Los Angeles by a point in the Norris Division, highlights tonight's schedule.

JUST CASUAL MENTION OF FANTASTIC FIGURES

TORONTO (UPI) — Attorney Alan Eagleson, casually mentioning figures of $5 million to $6 million, predicted Friday that next year Bobby Orr of Boston Bruins will become the highest paid hockey player ever.

Eagleson, Orr's attorney and director of the National Hockey League Players' Association, confirmed the World Hockey Association has put out feelers for Orr when his contract expires in mid-76.

Asked about reports the WHA New England Whalers had offered Orr a five year, $2.5 million contract, Eagleson said "I spoke with a gentleman today who confirmed that he had offered that to Bobby. "Whether this person works for New England or not, I don't know."

"I told him that as far as I was concerned we would get twice that just to stay with the Bruins. Now that has been interpreted as a request for $5 million over five years.

"My only other comment was that Bobby Orr is still better than a National Hockey League franchise — and NHL franchises are selling for $6 million."

Spoils Shared By Hoop Hosts

Both host clubs had their troubles Friday in the opening day of the third annual Tillicum high school boys' basketball tournament.

Reynolds Roadrunners, the host team in group one, split their two games, losing 82-54 to Kelowna Owls and defeating Carson Graham of Vancouver, 61-45.

Kelowna tripped Belmont Braves, 70-49, to finish the first day with a 2-0 record. The Braves earned a share of second with Reynolds by beating Carson Graham, 82-67.

At Esquimalt, where group two plays, the Dockers defeated Penticton Lake, 48-41, but lost, 49-48, to Grand Forks when the Interior team scored the final basket with eight seconds left to play.

Grand Forks tops group two with a 2-0 record. Esquimalt and Penticton are 1-1 and Prince George is 0-2.

In other boys' exhibition games, Oak Bay Bays lost 72-71 to the visiting Richmond Colts while at Cowichan Vic High Totems advanced to the finals of the Totem tournament by defeating Maple Ridge, 77-49.

Boxers Erupt

London Boxing Club exploded for four unanswered goals in the third period and trimmed University of Victoria Vikings, 7-1, in Vancouver Island Hockey League play Friday at Esquimalt Sports Centre.

Bob Lucas tallied twice for the Boxers with singles coming from Al McLaren, Graham Brown, Bob Boyd, Brian Hamilton and Jack Richardson. Graham Clarke scored the lone Viking goal.

Ed Hastings and Bob Cooper combined for 23 saves in the Boxers' goal, while Roger Jolley blocked 18 for UVic.

LETHBRIDGE — University of Victoria Vikettes dropped all three of they volleyball matches Friday in the opening day of the Canada West Women's Athletic Association tournament.

Vikettes lost, 15-6, 4-15, 15-5, to University of Alberta, 15-10, 6-15, 15-5, to University of Calgary and 15-9, 15-9, to University of Lethbridge.

Alberta and Saskatchewan finished the day on top with 2-0 won-lost records while University of British Columbia and Calgary were 1-1 and Lethbridge 1-2.

Canadians Earn Silver Medals

CHRISTCHURCH, N.Z. (CP) — Marian Stewart, Diane Jones and a 400-metre relay swimming team captured silver medals for Canada today in the New Zealand Games.

Miss Stewart of Point Claire, Que., came closest to a gold medal of the three Canadian runners-up, finishing less than a second behind Marcia Morey of the United States in the 200-metre backstroke.

Miss Jones of Saskatoon was second to the Soviet Union's Naadyezdha Tkachenko in the pentathlon. She had 4,299 points to the Soviet athletes 4,425.

The Canadian team of Wendy Cook of Vancouver, Miss Stewart, Patti Stenhouse of Surrey, B.C., and Wendy Quirk of Point Claire, finished more than two seconds behind the winners from the U.S. in the 400-metre medley relay with a time 4:29.97.

Three world record performances—two by Australian swimmer Stephen Holland and one by weightlifter David Rigert of the Soviet Union—highlighted competition in the third day of the Games.

Holland, 16, swam the 1,500 metres in 15 minutes 27.79 seconds. On the way, he was timed at 8:15.0 for 800 metres.

Rigert set a world light-heavyweight snatch record with a lift of 363¾ pounds, topping the old mark of 360¼ pounds.

Miss Quirk, Pam MacLeod of Vancouver and Becky Smith of Edmonton took bronze medals.

After winning the 200-metre butterfly Friday, Miss Quirk finished third today in the 400-metre freestyle behind Jenny Turrall of Australia. The Canadian had a time of 4:20.11.

Miss MacLeod was third in women's highboard diving with 381.00 points behind Janet Ely of the U.S. Miss Ely's score was 407.61.

The third-place finish today gave Miss Smith, 15, three medals in the Games. She won a gold medal Thursday in the 200-metre medley and a bronze Friday in the 200-metre butterfly.

Fires Burn in the Stands Before Test Match Halted

BOMBAY, India (Reuter) — Play in the fifth cricket test match between India and the West Indies was abandoned 90 minutes early Friday after fights broke out in the stands between fans and police.

The trouble — which lasted 1½ hours — started after a spectator had allegedly been roughly treated by police. Other fans started fires and part of a protective wire fence collapsed, apparently without causing any serious injuries. Later, it was announced that two police constables were under suspension.

Police said 11 people were treated for minor injuries.

At the height of the disturbance at Wankhede Stadium, hundreds of steel-helmeted police, carrying nightsticks and riot shields, moved into the crowd and were met by a hail of bottles, stones and seat-cushions.

Some fans smashed seats and benches in the new stadium and others invaded the field, trampling the wicket.

The players were driven back to their hotels with police escorts.

When play was halted for the day, the West Indies had 528 runs for five wickets with Clive Lloyd 201 not out.

Play is scheduled to resume today.

Storm Delays Start of Test

ADELAIDE, Australia (AP) — Rain washed out play in the first day of the fifth cricket test between Australia and England.

Heavy overnight rain seeped through the covers onto the pitch after almost an inch of rain hit the Adelaide ground overnight and high winds lifted the covers.

Scorpions Try the Ice

Basketball on ice?

Unusual, to say the least, but it's part of the lineup for the 5th annual Kinsmen Schmockey Night Monday at Memorial Arena.

Competing teams will be University of Victoria Vikings and Victoria Scorpions and to officials' knowledgs, it will be the first basketball game on ice.

Another featured event will offer MLAs a chance to strike back at the media when the two groups strap on the blades for a hockey game. Reports indicate the media will be strong in numbers but weak in talent against the polished politicians.

Other events include a broomball game between city police and RCMP, demonstrations by Greater Victoria Figure skaters and chariot races among seven Victoria high schools.

A two-hour show with the emphasis on fun once again, Schmockey Night will launch in this area the Mothers' March for the disabled an annual fund drive directed by the Kinsmen Rehabilitation Foundation of B.C.

Nancy Green Raine is chairman of the show, the proceeds of which go to the Mothers' March.

Mainland Rinks Overpower Scots

VANCOUVER (CP) — Pacific Coast Curling Association rinks increased Canada's lead in the 15-event Strathcona Cup competition with Scotland by winning all five games Friday night.

The victories gave Canada an 11-4 lead after three rounds. Earlier, Canada had won three of the five games in each of the Cup rounds at Calgary and Victoria.

The Scottish tour continues today with cup matches at Edmonton. Scotland and Canada have each won six of the previous 12 Strathcona Cup series, held every five years.

The Strathcona Cup is decided by total points scored during all the games of the tour which ends Feb. 11 at Halifax.

'THE ABDICATION'

A Power Story, Not Love Story

A Film Review by MARY SPARACIO

Don't be deceived by the advertising drivel that declares The Abdication is about "A woman with a profane love for a man of God". What love story there is, is minor compared to the story about power.

The Abdication is about Queen Christina of Sweden, played magnificently by Liv Ullmann, and the reasons for the abdication of her throne in 1654.

It's an English film, inexpensive but well made. We are in the Sweden and Rome of the 17th century, yet these characters are not foreign to us.

Christina is a philosopher, an educated woman, rare enough in her time but her remoteness is further complicated by her great power as queen. She is loath to accept a place of subordination and take a husband.

Christina abdicates, leaving the Protestant north, travelling to seek an audience with the Pope and embrace the Catholic faith. It is necessary to be accepted by the Pope to be admitted into the cultural circles of southern Europe. There is no other place to go. Rumors of her conduct precede her to Rome and she's denied her holy audience until she passes an examiner. Peter Finch is her Cardinal Benevolent Inquisitor. Most of the movie poetically deals with the emotional an intellectual tuggings of these two characters.

ULLMANN
. . . a disgrace

Through the superior skills and craft of Ullmann and Finch and an excellent use of flashbacks, we are entertained and enlightened gradually as to the nature of these characters.

It's a power struggle with an ambitious cardinal who covets being Pope and can not understand Christina's abdication of power. She understands power more than he. She was born with it, he keeps his through political intrigue.

Christina seeks equality in love, something we assume to be a modern concern. It would seem there is nothing new under the sun, but so much more impossible in the 17th century. How near madness it drives her to want something that doesn't exist. The movie deals with a struggle that does exist, the domination of one person over another.

The main character is a woman, a rare occurrence. Rarer still, she thinks and has self-determination. She is neither a whore nor a mother, blaspheming current movie tradition.

The Abdication is a beautifully documented historical movie. Many of the scenes are moving portraits of the period.

It should perhaps be sold with the advertising tag of "A woman with a profane desire for equality and her desire to prove she's not mad, to a man of God". But I guess that's not terribly catchy.

Papal Visit

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Bernadette Olowo of Uganda presented her credentials to Pope Paul on Thursday as the first woman ambassador to the Vatican. Miss Olowo, 27, a Roman Catholic who also is ambassador to West Germany, told the Pope she was "certain all other women, especially those from my beloved country, share with me the great honor and pride that your holiness has deigned to receive me."

ROLLING STONE

A Shrivelled Career

By JIM MILLER

In defence of his tour and new album, George Harrison has argued that, "If you don't expect anything, life is one big bonus. But when you expect anything, then you can be let down." So expect nothing — is that the moral of a shriveled career?

Given Harrison's appearance at his recent concerts, the audience could be forgiven its expectations. Here was the first major American tour by an ex-Beatle; and here was Harrison himself, with his shag blown hair and bell bottoms billowing, looking like a picture-perfect Beatle.

But Harrison himself wants to be taken as a no-time Beatle, sometime rockstar, and full-time guru. The hardening of his religious attitudes has made it harder for him to accept his own past. While he tries to rise above his association with the Beatles, he finds himself hampered by his own limitations. It just may be that George Harrison was never cut out to be a solo artist.

He was, after all, only a member of the most illustrious group in rock history. Onstage and in the studio together, the Beatles were always something more than particular musicians playing their particular songs. They fashioned something infinitely more complex and provocative than that: a total sound, a scene, a myth and a way of life. And they did it collectively, each member contributing his own allotted part.

In that setting, George Harrison performed brilliantly. He had a knack for fills, riffs, even writing Beatles' tunes. Harrison's early songs for the group not only compare favorably with Lennon-McCartney's best, they also sound like Lennon-McCartney's best. Stripped of the Beatles' company, however, Harrison's weaknesses as a musician have gradually surfaced. His voice has always been dogged by a limited range and poor intonation, just as his guitar playing, adequate for fills within precise arrangements, has always been rudimentary. Under the pressure of composing new material to sustain a solo career, his songs have become as predictable as his spiritual preoccupations.

Yet it is only in the wake of his disastrous tour and Dark Horse, his disastrous album, that George Harrison finally stands naked. For his new record, Harrison hired a band of merely competent studio pros, saddled himself with a passel of preachy lyrics and then cut the album hoarse, his voice whining offensively, turning each idiot phrase into a prickly barb.

HARRISON
. . . solo flop

The nadir of the album is reached when Patti Harrison, George's estranged wife, joins him and her current lover, Eric Clapton, for a spirited trio rendition of the Everly Brothers' old "Bye Bye Love." It seems a sick man's idea of a joke.

The album is fleshed out with a banal instrumental ("Hari's on Tour (Epress)"), a raspy stab at "Auld Lang Syne '74" ("Ding Dong; Ding Dong") and the title track which, thanks to Harrison's no voice and stilted lyrics, quite fails to evoke the self-confident master of "My Sweet Lord."

But Dark Horse is ultimately something more than an embarrassingly bad record. It is also the chronicle of a performer out of his element, working to deadline, enfeebling his overextended talents by a rush to deliver new "LP product," rehearse a band and assemble a cross-country tour, all within three weeks.

'A Healthy Spirit'

There is something unique at Craigdarroch Castle, says Vancouver pianist and teacher Edward Parker. And he is not speaking of the building.

He is referring to the atmosphere of the Conservatory of Music which has inhabited the castle for the last five years.

Parker is now spending two days of each week teaching at the Conservatory and he finds delightful the warmth, the wide-open channels of communication and interchange between students and among the faculty.

Despite its present size — there are nearly 1,400 students enrolled and 100 teachers on the faculty — he finds nothing mechanical or impersonal in the processes.

"There is a fine healthy spirit of co-operation and sharing," he says. "And time — in spite of the close scheduling and space pressures — time for the students to develop as people."

The quiet-spoken, unassuming and dedicated musician taught for 10 years in the music department of the University of B.C. and has had a private studio in Vancouver for 25 years.

Among his own teachers have been Barbara Custance, internationally known Canadian composer-pianist, Anton Kuerti of Toronto, Grant Johannessen, the celebrated Madame Lhevinne at Aspen, and Eduardo del Pueyo at Shawnigan Lake Summer School.

He gained his ARCT diploma at the age of 17, the Royal Conservatory's special diploma and all-Canada gold medal at 25.

In 1973 he gained his Master of Music degree in performance from the University of Washington.

Out of his experiences at Banff, Aspen and Shawnigan have come his conviction that students at large summer schools don't know where they're going.

"They all concentrate on the idea that they are going to be concert artists," he says. "They never come to grips with and face the probable actuality that they will have to divert their talents into some other phase of musical life."

Parker much prefers the Shawnigan Lake summer school to the Banff school.

"Banff School is too big, too undisciplined. Too many outside influences interfere with its purpose," he explains. "Banff is en route for tourists and drifters, which Shawnigan is not. That means that at Shawnigan students are not distracted and generally achieve something at least of the purpose for which they go there."

EDWARD PARKER . . . praise for conservatory

Parker also feels that in a university music department students tend to get swamped with academic projects. On the other hand a couple of years at a conservatory offers something special for the performer, he says.

"We only have one in this province and it's right here in Victoria."

The Community Music School in Vancouver may develop into a conservatory, he says, but it has not reached that status yet.

"Life for many music students is lonely, you know," Parker says. "They concentrate for hours at a time in the studio and practice room and in the average situation have little contact with other students.

"As a consequence many mature without a developed personality and so therefore are not interesting to know. Also they don't learn to interpret because they have no experience of life and limited human contact."

He comments on the renowned pianist Horowitz as an artist with a warped personality whose withdrawal and neuroses prevent him from doing more than perhaps one concert a year — "and that is agony to him."

Rubinstein, on the other hand, is an amazing artist in his 80s who can still tackle an extensive virtuosic program with vigor and joy.

According to his autobiography, Rubinstein wasted time and was lazy about practice as a youth but, on the other hand, allowed himself growing space and time to develop many close human relationships.

"At the conservatory here, students get together, they talk and listen to each other; they really communicate. They gain perspective and come to an understanding and acceptance of their own potential. This is what can be considered a pretty rare situation," Parker says.

On the subject of music festivals his attitude is positive and favorable.

"Festivals are valuable because they tell performers what they can accomplish under pressure," he says.

"They provide incentive. And again, the festival atmosphere here is unique. There is an esprit de corps in the piano and string sections that is especially noticeable," he comments.

"This is probably because many of them have got to know each other as people before they became competitors."

There are two types of students who should never enter a festival, according to Parker: the child who doesn't want to because of a high-strung temperament should not be forced into it "because it is good for you." It isn't under those circumstances. The child of ambitious parents who create stress by their emphasis on winning is also done harm by festivals.

Parker doesn't believe however that competition should be eliminated. "The edge of keenness goes out when there is no contest." But he does recommend the softening process that has characterized the Victoria Music Festival. "It's a simple case of de-emphasis," he says.

Parker has adjudicated widely in the United States, B.C. and Alberta. It was during joint adjudication stints that he first met conservatory principal Robin Wood.

He was invited to join the conservatory faculty by Wood to share the heavy enrolment of senior piano students. Next year Parker hopes to switch the present situation so that he will become resident here and do limited teaching in Vancouver.

A fine pianist as well as an outstanding teacher, he is also seeking time to work with the intention to doing some recitals next winter.

'BUTLEY' NEXT FOR BASTION

A Savage, Witty Play

A genuinely witty play, often described as cruelly funny and sparkling with acerbic British wit, will be the next mainstage production by Bastion Theatre Company.

Butley, a brilliantly successful West End play by Simon Gray, opens Friday at McPherson Playhouse and will have a 10-day run in Victoria before taking to the road to play several up-Island centres.

The play revolves around the scintillating verbal manipulations of Ben Butley, teacher, cynic — an impotent rager against the banal, mediocre and hypocritical.

Set in an English college, the dialogue is full of clever epigrams and repartee in which playwright Gray succeeds in coupling a desperate blackness of vision with remarkable comic gift.

Butley will provide Bastion's audience with an unusually rich evening of theatre and more than a little to take home and think about.

Under Edwin Stephenson's direction Gray Files will be seen in the title role with Larry Aubrey, Patricia Carroll Brown, Gil Osborne, Glynis Leyshon, Norman Browning and Brenda McKane as the supporting cast.

The challenging and difficult role of Butley has fallen to a capable actor in Files, who comes from Toronto where he recently completed a role in a pilot episode of the proposed CBC series, Oooh Canada.

On stage he has just finished doing Guildenstern in Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead, for the Press Theatre.

He has also worked in England, notably for Bristol Old Vic and the Liverpool Playhouse.

Butley will run Monday through Feb. 8 including Sunday but excepting Monday, with matinees Feb. 2 at 2:30 p.m. and Feb. 8 at 4 p.m.

Theatre Competition

For the purpose of encouraging the production of original plays in zone festivals and the finals showcase, the B.C. Drama Association is offering prizes to playwrights and producing groups.

In a zone festival a $200 award goes to the author of the best original script and $50 to the community theatre group producing the play.

For the finals, $200 goes to the group and $50 to the author.

Additionally, the New Play Centre offers $1,000 for workshops with professional directors to work with theatre groups, playwrights, directors and casts prior to the festivals.

Entry deadline is Feb. 15. For rules and entry forms contact should be made with Mrs. Mien van Heek, 1261 Keith Road, West Vancouver.

The Grab-Bag Can't Hold Wit

By PAT BARCLAY

There's been a lot of loose talk going around lately to the effect that Canadians can't be funny when they try. (When they try not to be — well, of course, that's another story altogether.) I don't know where this idea originated but it has certainly snowballed rapidly in recent months, as ideas among the Canadian literati tend to do.

It's nonsense, of course. A great many Canadian writers take care to develop their skill at writing humor and always have. Whether this is because so many of them grew up in a country where everyone around them was trying to write like Stephen Leacock, or whether there really is something indigenously humorous about the Canadian situation, is a moot point. But the fact remains that there is no scarcity of home-grown humor, in print or out of it.

Having got that off my chest, I now turn to The Treasury of Great Canadian Humour, edited by Alan Walker, who is Managing Editor of Canadian Magazine. If any one book could prove my point, this one should be able to.

But what do we find? A collection of some 88 pieces by 66 authors who struck Mr. Walker as funny. Most of them leave me — and possibly you, as well — cold sober. I don't want to berate Mr. Walker too strenuously for deficiencies of the funnybone over which, poor man, he can have little control, but I would like to point out one or two things.

For instance: Anyone who could select the definition of "EVER" from Mark Orkin's witty Canajan, Eh? as an example of humor has his wires — and perhaps his eyes — crossed. Also, a fact which strikes me as particularly dispiriting: Mr. Walker edits the same national magazine which prints that deplorably unfunny cartoon strip, "Doug Wright's Family." The unfunniness of Doug Wright defies description, yet somebody at that Canadian Magazine must like him. It seems likely, on the evidence of Treasury, that that somebody is Alan Walker.

There are a few selections, however, which come right up to the mark. One of these was originally published in the Canadian by Earl McRae, who describes his attempts to compete in the Canadian Duck-Calling Championships in Orillia, Ontario. Another is an excerpt from And Now . . . Here's Max, by Max Ferguson. I tried this one on the children while they were eating their lunch, and in no time at all Ferguson had them falling off their chairs and rolling about the floor in an advanced state of hilarity.

Why is it, do you suppose, that descriptions of what really happened can be, and often are, much funnier than our wildest inventions? Crusty old Malcolm Muggeridge must have been quite right when he declared that it was no longer possible to satirize the activities and foibles of modern man because the truth was a thousand times more laughable than anything a satirist might devise.

Treasury's dozens of clever but weak-sounding little essays about frank talks between father and son, or somebody's cat, or playing the piano, certainly tend to bear Muggeridge's theory out. Of the fictional pieces, only the ones which hit hardest — e.g. Mordecai Richler's, from The Incomparable Atuk — make much impact.

Walker has chosen to round off his collection with a piece about National Lampoon, which he calls an "Appendix." This is one appendix, in my view, which deserves to be taken out. Presumably Walker included it because he was delighted to find a piece about a non-Canadian publication which admits the existence, not merely of Canada, but of a funny Canada. (The reason is simple: there are several Canadians on the staff of the U.S.-based National Lampoon.) Its prominence in Treasury, however, is an error. Canadians do not need another country's seal of approval on their humorous potential.

As a Canadian writer for the National Lampoon points out: "Standing up singing "We stand on guard for thee" seventeen times before a hockey game is a bit silly. But Canadians know that — Americans don't know that their anthem is silly."

The trouble with anthologies of any sort is twofold: first, they necessarily bear the imprint of the anthologist's taste, and second, any excerpt, no matter how well chosen, is only a part of a whole. As a smattered bird's eye-view of a large chunk of territory they undoubtedly have their uses, but it would be a mistake to draw too many conclusions from them. The only way to get to know an interesting piece of country well is to travel it the hard way — on foot.

THE TREASURY OF GREAT CANADIAN HUMOUR, edited by Alan Walker. McGraw-Hill. $12.95.

Petroglyphs on the shoreline of Sproat Lake

Those Inscrutable Markings

By SUSAN MUSGRAVE

Very few prehistoric rock carvings on our coastline have any great aesthetic or cultural impact. For one thing their function, origin or age is almost totally inscrutable. For another their crude, vestigial outlines seem weak indeed next to the superlative, stylized expressions normally associated with West Coast Indian cultures. Occasionally a crowded site like Nanaimo's Petroglyph Park does impress — one is drawn into a chimerical world compounded of nightmare and the scientist's microscope. But it is hardly Lascaux.

INDIAN PETROGLYPHS of the Pacific Northwest, by Beth and Ray Hill. Hancock House, $17.50.

And the lack of cultural context is disconcerting too — the carved figures of a copulating couple may represent sky-earth union; it may embody a powerful shamanistic invocation for increase and plenty. Then again it may be the stone age equivalent of lavatorial graffiti, scratched by idle boys.

And it may not even necessarily be stone age. The modern vandalism at Petroglyph Park is indeed sickening and yet . . . the trouble is you can't always tell. Sometimes one feels like the society lady in the Punch cartoon: "If those flowers are made of plastic, I think it's in the worst possible taste."

All the same there is a special fascination about petroglyphs — hidden under moss, or on the under surface of tidal boulders, there must be hundreds of undiscovered ones that you or I may be the first to find. I think one of the attractions (apart from the simple fun of searching) is to find, in our elemental environment, some sign of human life. The poles and longhouses die in a century, petroglyphs are marked on the country's basic fabric. There is a magic in reaching across time and space to an unknown human presence, and all cultures have found in the markings of the long-dead some kind of warmth and reassurance in a landscape.

Beth and Ray Hill have put together a compact, thorough and well-illustrated guide to the known B.C. petroglyphs and to some in the States and Alaska. There are maps, photographs and brief descriptions. It's a resource book that anyone interested in our coastline should have, and despite its thoroughness it is a layman's book. Clearly, too, it was a labor of love for the Hills and there are some revealing human moments — as when they confess their wish to conceal one location because it is so quiet and beautiful and they hate the thought of its becoming a tourist trap.

Personally I think the sections on the possible significance of the petroglyphs a bit unnecessary — especially as each proposed theory invariably concludes: "However, there is no evidence that this was in fact the case." And there are a few irritating things in the book — occasionally it is unclear which site a photograph belongs to; if a petroglyph was discovered 28 feet under the ground, you would think the staggering antiquity implied would call for some comment; and I'm agog to learn how a sandstone boulder measuring 3'6"x2'2"x1'6" could weigh 17 tons!

But these are minor points — its a fascinating, well-produced book which may start a lot of people collecting "rubbings" (the Hill's rubbings are on cotton, not paper). Petroglyphs exist that show the first sailing and steam vessels to pass up the coast. It may even be a still-practised art form. Actually, a friend of mine made one on Gabriola Island a few years ago. It's quite powerful but, I won't reveal its location. I'd hate it to become a tourist trap.

PETER MURRAY - EDITOR

A Travelling Of the Soul

By GEORGE WOODCOCK

The days when a poet could sit down, like Wordsworth, to write a long, continuous and fairly explicit poetic meditation like The Prelude seem to have ended a couple of generations ago. Poetry has become, since the symbolists, concerned less with direct rational statement than it ever was, more involved on those ambiguous verges where emotion and intuition guard the gates of the unconscious, and where access to the animal but also to the spiritual sides of man's nature seem ambiguously to exist.

The poetry of this kind of exploration is not likely to be the coherent, structured discourse in which the poet's voice pursues a chronologically ordered narrative or a rationally ordered argument, as in The Prelude. It is more likely to come, like the insights one has into the areas beyond the rational, in a series of sharp flashes or, more often, muted and elusive illuminations.

TIMELIGHT, by Robin Skelton. McClelland and Stewart. $6.95.

I say all this apropos of Robin Skelton's latest book of verse, Timelight. At first sight, if we had not been told otherwise, this might seem to be a collection of lyrics, each valid in itself, though perhaps a little obscure in its intent. But, as Robin Skelton makes clear in his Preface, Timelight is not just a group of disconnected poems. It is a group written in a fairly short period, deliberately to illuminate a theme that was constantly in the poet's mind.

I leave the reader to study the Preface himself; actually, it does not tell us the theme very explicitly, precisely because it is a theme that cannot be stated in any direct way, but rather it warns us to be on the lookout for a unifying intent behind all the poems. And perhpas one can get a better idea of that intent from the last lines of the first poem, Overture:

. . . Listen
This is desperate.
I am trapped
in memory's riot, carried through everything that bones lay claim to.

Furthermore, as Skelton himself points out, a prime clue to the whole venture is given in a single line of one of the later poems: "Every travelling is of the soul."

So, for example, there is a group of pieces that appear to be about physical travel, and indeed are based on visits the poet has made to actual places, but which end each in its own meditation on what can be observed if one regards the mundane scene as a kind of translucent screen through which is seen a looming and ambiguous reality:

. . . it is the will of being's self that fills the crowding blossom with the gentle haze and asks the mountains
for their certainties.

There are other poems in which the protagonist — not necessarily, we are assured, the poet — tackles the problems of life and death in dramatic monologues. A series of Bestiary poems develop the animal symbolism of the world of gross existence through which the soul must pass. And finally there is the title poem, Timelight, in which, mirroring the techniques of Eliot and Pound, the masters of poetic modernism in the English language, Skelton fuses memory of incident and book and dream into a finale in which, as he says:

I mingle memory and desire,
dream and dream,
to hint a whole
beyond the vagaries of its parts, speak equally
in death, in life, of partings and its onward journey, finding in age
a new spring of clearer water, another knowledge,
turning my face
into light.

So it is — if we accept Skelton's view and consider the parts as facets of the whole — a poem in which, in varying ways (and with great virtuosity) the age-old metaphor of the inner pilgrimage is worked out. It shows very clearly, I think, Skelton's links with the great modernists in whose shadow or by whose light (according to one's way of looking at it) he has always written, not only Eliot and Pound but also the later Yeats.

Yet at the same time, Timelight is a self-consistent work that stands in its own right, outside its antecedents, and, like every book Skelton produces, provides its own ingredients of the unexpected, even though the unexpected is often expressed in the familiar rhythms and the characteristic images to which his readers have become accustomed.

Travelling Lady and the Diarist

By JAMES McCOOK

Victoria never had a more observant visitor than Miss Sophia Cracroft, niece of the arctic explorer Sir John Franklin. She was here with Lady Franklin in 1861 and 1870.

In 1860 the widow Franklin was 68 years old and not in robust health, but she decided on a return visit to the United States, where she disliked the bragging and uncultured accents she heard. A highly intelligent and courageous woman, Lady Franklin could never have completed her long journey across the Atlantic and United States to the Pacific coast and up to Canada without the assistance of "Sophy", then aged 44.

LADY FRANKLIN VISITS THE PACIFIC NORTHWEST. Edited by Dr. Dorothy Blakey Smith. 119 pages and index. Provincial Archives of B.C. $4 paperback, $6 cloth.

Lady Franklin had "a way with her" and quickly gained the confidence of people. She chatted about personalities and events and "Sophy" remembered it all.

In 1859 Capt. F. Leopold McClintock brought proof from the Arctic that Franklin had died in 1847 and 12 years of strain and uncertainty for his widow were ended. She came to the Pacific Coast because she wished to speak with Capt. George H. Richards, RN, who had been appointed to duties in this area after taking an important part in the search for her husband. A second reason was the request of Miss Angela Burdett-Coutts, a benefactor of the new Anglican diocese of Columbia, for a report on the progress of the church in colonial wilds.

Lady Franklin's particular interests were the church schools in Victoria. She approved of the Ladies' Collegiate School where she found the curriculum included music, singing, drawing, French, German, Italian and Spanish. She found pupils in the Boys' Collegiate School receiving an education second only to that in the best English schools. The Victoria boys promised Lady Franklin that they would name their cricket club after her.

But, as Sophy recorded it all, the Victoria visit was pretty tame compared to what was to come. Lady Franklin seized an opportunity to go up the Fraser to Hope and Yale to see the goldminers at work. Beyond Yale she was a passenger in a canoe paddled several miles through a narrow canyon and rough waters; when she returned from this trip her new friends in Yale had strung a banner across the canyon christening it "Lady Franklin Pass." In 1975 it seems a trifle sad that this name never was given official recognition.

LADY FRANKLIN . . . western trip recalled

The diligent Sophy recorded that there was no copper money in use in B.C., nothing less than 10 cents being circulated. She bought argillite carvings by Haida Indians, noted that Lady Douglas was very shy, enjoyed the Victoria lodgings where they were looked after by a colored barber and his wife, found the streets in spring to be "a black slough", recorded the story of the Iron Church brought out by Bishop George Hills, delighted in the view of the "Olympian Hills" and did not fail to observe that Governor Dougas' house stood in "an old-fashioned garden."

She picked up some of the humor. A man was asked how he became a "colonel". He replied that he had once dined with a general and was called "colonel" ever after. She regarded gravely the news that some Victoria lots were sold for 2,000 pounds for about one-third of an acre; interest rates were two to six per cent a month.

When they returned in 1870, Lady Franklin and Sophy noted many changes in Victoria but their welcome was warm again.

The events they discussed and the people they talked with are brought into sharp focus by Sophy's pen and also by the excellent notes about them provided by Dr. Blakey Smith as editor. Dr. Allan Turner, Provincial Archivist, says the Archives hopes to publish one volume a year of "memoirs" such as this, resuming a series abandoned for several years but remembered with appreciation.

Six Fateful Years

By TORCHY ANDERSON

In 1914 Canada came to attention and rushed to stand at Britain's side; in 1939 Canada held a brief session of Parliament and prepared to stand at Britain's side — or, rather, stand against dictatorships.

It has been observed by competent historians that by the end of the First World War Canada graduated from the nursery of colonialism to the independence and determination of youthful nationhood. The second step, developed during the Second World War, is carefully, and I think fairly, described by J. L. Granatstein, a student and teacher of history.

CANADA'S WAR: The Politics of the Mackenzie King Government 1939-1945, by J. L. Granatstein. Oxford. $18.95.

As one whose job it was to sit in the press gallery during the second war this reviewer can testify that the strains and stresses of the period cannot be exaggerated. The author deals with them fairly. This is not a biography. It is an account of six years in the history of Canada and the life of Mackenzie King.

The author realizes, and emphasizes, the change that took place after the fall of France. Before that British industrialists did their best to discourage Canadian industry going headlong into war production. They wanted men but not the goods. After the tragic spring of 1940 they wanted both.

To a creditable extent Granatstein re-creates the high drama of events subsequent to France tossing in the towel. King was, perhaps to a greater extent than is realized, the link between those two strong characters Churchill and Roosevelt. The right link was important in that partnership. King never forgot he stood between two domineering men. Always he was cautious, sometimes foxy.

King, as any wartime leader, had to contend with the strong men he had brought into his government. Maybe that was his greatest strength. He called together one of the most dynamic cabinets Canada had seen and managed to keep them all pulling in the right direction. King had a horror of drunkeness; yet one of his cabinet who accomplished most in the war effort took time out occasionally for a toot — and not in secret.

In both wars leaders came head-on in collision with Conscription. That word stands capitalized in Canadian history. King shuffled, sidestepped and split hairs. But he got through without tearing the country apart. As the author emphasizes, he also had the farsightedness to make a start with progressive social legislation before the guns went quiet.

In 1945, when leaders in many countries faced extinction, King called an election. The author points out a remarkable thing about this vote: The Liberals won a majority of only one seat, but the Conservatives got only 67 of 245 seats. The (then) CCF won 28. CCF led the military vote overseas, with Liberals second.

Some said it was a miracle that a government could survive a war.

"Miracle, yes," writes the author, "but miracles that the Liberal party and Mackenzie King had worked hard to make real."

Murder With a Twist

By JIM CRERAR

These are any number of ways to thicken the plot of a murder mystery. A spicy concoction of booze, broads and private eyes is popular, if not always digestible. A more palatable result is often obtained by adding a pinch of logic to the incisiveness of a master sleuth and simmering slowly.

THE NINTH TENTACLE, by Marion Rippon. Doubleday. $5.75.

Victoria author Marion Rippon's favorite recipe, however, is a blend of the psychiatric with the low-key approach of a wise old French gendarme named Maurice Ygree. This is Mrs. Rippon's third published mystery in four years and it is Ygree who solves it, just as he did her first two, The Hand of Solange and Behold, the Druid Weeps. The setting of all three books is France, where the author lived for a time.

Ygree is retired now, content to soak up the sun in a sleepy Moselle Valley village and await the arrival of his old protege, Inspector Michelin, on a holiday visit from Paris. Michelin shows up in time for the grotesque murder of ambitious and self-centred Viktor Rolland, an engineer at the nearby communications equipment plant and altogether deserving of his fate.

It is a psychological murder, but is not full of the macabre. The author's background in psychiatric nursing enables her to handle it with insight and sympathy.

In this regard, Ygree is a tremendous help. He is a very human character, the perfect foil when the going gets heavy, and Mrs. Rippon uses him to advantage.

The Ninth Tentacle is Mrs. Rippon's best effort so far and what makes it so is her developing skill as a writer. The Hand of Solange dwelled rather heavily on the psychiatric; Behold, the Druid Weeps brought the characters more to life; this one offers a nice blend of character and plot development.

Our old friend Ygree provides the best measuring stick of the writer's improving qualities. In spite of his declining years, he seems more alive and real than ever.

Ygree, unfortunately, is no longer in good health and one wonders if he will be around to solve any future crimes. It is to be hoped so; he has become entirely too comfortable to discard.

MARION RIPPON . . . third time best

New Theatre Company Has Some New Ideas

A theatrical company with a message is the newest addition to the cultural scene in Victoria.

Its somewhat equivocal name is The One World Revue Company. But its performances will only be "revues" in the sense that they will present a collage of material based on a theme.

It will in no way, however, approximate what most people's idea of a revue is.

The company will demonstrate its purpose, style of presentation and potential at debut performances Jan. 31 and Feb. 1 and 2, at Cool Aid's Springridge Theatre on the corner of Fernwood and Gladstone.

Title and substance of the first production — The Family Revue — provides a clue to the overall theme which will be carried on through subsequent productions.

Rupert Downing, who is sharing the role of company director with Michael Stephen, explains that the group has already done one private show (at UVic's Student Union building for the Third World Conference) and that this encouraged them to establish the company on a broader bassis.

At the moment the group has no money, current expenses being financed out of the pockets of the 10 people who are its members.

"We would like to develop into a pro company," says Downing, "but that's in the future." For now he and his fellow One World members are motivated by the simple belief that there is a place for this kind of theatre and a need to get their message across.

What is the message? Essentially, to make people consider in depth the human relationships that exist within the worldwide family of man by using as their medium the microcosm of family life.

"We are exploring a variety of different styles and materials, from surrealist to light realism and satire," says Downing. "We will also use multi-media techniques to make theatre more cogent in stimulating and broadening human awareness."

The company had, to begin with, two scripts written by Downing. These were mainly symbolic, he says, rather than realistic, and to flesh them out and balance them a day-to-day situation in a North American family was improvised.

"It's the kind of situation that tends often to suppress the individuality of persons within the family, both parents and children. It is quite unnecessary that this should be so but it frequently can be seen extended to a world situation," he says.

Following the introductory performances at the Springridge Theatre, the next project will be a piece for the Golden anniversary of the United Church in Canada which will be performed as part of church services throughout the Greater Victoria and Sidney areas.

The theme of family and its extension to international relations will again provide the inspiration for the piece, titled from the church's motto, That All Shall Be One.

Downing is a talented actor who was seen recently as the British soldier in Camosun College's The Hostage. Stephen is well known as a gifted and experienced actor-director who has worked with Victoria Theatre Guild and Victoria Operatic Society among others.

The rest of the company consists of David Stephen, Yetta Lees, Martin Screech, Bruce Vye, Marty Reynolds, Matthew Bonner, Karen Frey, Dawn Stuart and Chris Gravenor, technical director.

Doctors' Offices Entered Overnight

Four doctors' offices in the Bank of Commerce building at Douglas and Fort were broken into overnight, Victoria police said today.

The break-ins were discovered at about 4 a.m. by a patrolling policeman who noticed a window near the View Street entrance to the bdilding had been smashed.

Police have not yet determined what was taken although suspect it was the work of a drug user.

Egads! Gov't Takes Over Beer

STOCKHOLM (Reuter) — Swedish beer drinkers—who have just witnessed a state takeover of the country's largest brewery—are wondering what their brew is going to taste like when the government gets through with it.

In a long-awaited move the state has bought up 60 per cent of Sweden's biggest brewery, Pripps AB, and has let it be known this is only the beginning.

For years powerful temperence groups have been pressing the government to crack down on alcoholism.

Beer lovers now fear the state is going to take the fun out of drinking by launching a new and weaker beer ironically called "people's beer" which no one except teetotallers seems to want.

At present there are three different classes of beer sold in Sweden ranging from so-called "light beer" containing about 1.8 per cent alcohol to strong with 4.5 per cent.

The target of temperance groups and social reformers has been middle beer, 3.6 per cent alcohol and the beer most Swedes drink.

A five-party commission appointed to study the alcohol problem has unanimously come out in favor of creating the new people's beer as a substitute for middle beer, containing about three per cent alcohol.

Some dissenters argue that hard liquor and not beer is the crux of the Swedish drinking problem. When Swedish beer and wine consumption is compared with other countries, it is well down on the list. But when statistics on spirits consumption is considered, Sweden and the United States share second place behind Poland.

During the last 10 years the state, through its national wine and liquor monopoly stores, has been going all out to get Swedes off spirits and onto wine.

One of Europe's largest wine importers, Sweden offers some of the lowest prices in the world for high-quality wines. Some experts say you can buy a better and cheaper bottle of French Burgundy in Stockholm than in Paris.

Even today there is still a strong social stigma attached to drinking. Many Swedes, especially those of middle age, seem to have a lingering guilt about drinking instilled in them during the fierce temperance movement which raged here in the early 1920s.

It is common to see rows of Swedes lined up at the counter of the state store shifting nervously about with heads bowed clutching their leather valises in which they secretly stash a purchase.

In recent years the monopolies themselves have plastered store walls with posters warning Swedes about the evils of drinking.

The majority of the small private brewers in the country have greeted the state's entry into the beer business positively. They say that with the state brewing beer, there will be less competition than before and a more open market for their product.

Play It Again . . . The Very Old Way

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

During the last 30 years — taking the end of the Second World War as the beginning of a new era — very little piano music has entered the international repertory. What is there? A few post-war sonatas and other pieces by Prokofiev. The other Russians, such as Kabalevsky, Khachaturian and Shostakovitch, are virtually unplayed except when Soviet pianists come visiting. Poulenc wrote some piano music that still is played, though the bulk of that dates from the 1920s and 1930s. Today, among French composers there is Messiaen, who has attracted some spokesmen, notably Peter Serkin in America. (Yvonne Loriod, who specializes in Messiaen's piano music, does not count; she is his wife.)

Nothing from modern Italy (though there never was much Italian piano music). Nothing from England. Nothing from Germany or Austria. (Remember, I am writing of music that has entered the reperfory.) In the United States there has been furious activity, but little has taken hold. Such ambitious works as the piano fantasy by Copland seem to have died virtually still-born. Norman Dello Joio's Third Piano Sonata once had a run. No longer. Such works as the Cage pieces for prepared piano, or the sonatas by Carter and Sessions, are the property only of a handful of pianists and are played at special modern-music concerts and hardly anywhere else. Indeed, the only American piano composition that has been picked up as a repertory piece is the Barber E Flat Minor Sonata.

It's a curious situation. There isn't a conductor of major standing who doesn't, during the course of his season, come in with a certain number of contemporary works. But try to think of a pianist of major standing who will play an avant-garde work in public. There are a few exceptions among the younger artists. Peter Serkin, John Ogdon, Lorin Hollander and one or two others have done some experimentation. They have gone out of their way to introduce music in which they believe. The trouble is that none of the new music that they have presented has taken hold.

Part of the answer to the problem is the general musical malaise of the times. In opera, for instance, how many works have entered the standard repertory since Wozzeck of 1925 and Turandot of 1926? Three? Four? (if that.) The period from 1945 until only a few years ago saw a musical avant-garde dominated by serial writing. How many repertory works did this international school produce? The answer is zero. Composers of traditional music do not seem to have enjoyed much better success. The last big international orchestral hit was Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, and for that we have to go back to the mid-1940s. Even the revered Stravinsky did not make much headway. Most of his post-Second World War music has received next to no public acceptance.

Is it the fault of the composers? The public? Probably the former. It is not as if the public has not been constantly exposed to new music, in the concert hall and on records. As for piano music, the quarter-century flirtation with serial techniques proved a sterile effort. Most of that kind of music could just as well have been played on the harpsichord, or marimba, or wood blocks. It was a collection of lines and forms rather than piano music.

GARDENING

Decimal Gardening Games . . .

There is no need for the home gardener to shiver and shake because of the metric changeover. Some look upon it as an unsurmountable brick wall.

But if we start "thinking metric" now, we shall be on top of the wall when the changeover day arrives.

All we have to do then is to drop on the other side, forget we ever heard of feet, pounds and gallons and talk about metres, grams, and litres instead.

The size of the garden, the potato crop, and the watering needed will remain the same.

Once over the wall we shall think back and wonder why we ever tolerated a system that divided inches into 64 parts, feet into 12, pounds into 16, ounces into 128ths, gallons into 64ths. Other countries carefully avoided such a mess.

The thing that bugs us now is the awkward looking conversions we see on packages and containers. A hundred foot roll of wax paper, for example, equals 30.48 metres, the area being 9.193 m. These decimals will eventually disappear and the roll will be 30 m. long and we shall be as happy as when it was 100 ft.

So lets make a little wooden toy and have some fun. Take an old garden stake, cut it 39 5-16 inches long, and divide it into four equal parts, each 9 13-16 inches.

We now have a one metre measuring stick divided into quarter metres, and if we like fussy work we can divide one of these quarters into 25 equal parts and each will be 100th metre or one centemetre. One inch is roughly 2.5 centimetres (cm.).

Wandering around the garden with our new toy we discover our normal spacing of vegetable rows (9 and 18 inches) approximates one-quarter metre (0.25 m.) and one-half metre (0.50 m.) since these measurements are equal to 9 13-16 inches 19⅝ inches.

We can amuse ourselves for a while measuring the height and width of shrubs, length of walks and beds, and the size of the vegetable patch.

When we finish we shall realize there is little difference in appearance between one yard and one metre.

At this point it is well to recall that throughout our lives we have rarely used a yardstick or a weighing scale to determine lengths and weights.

In fact, few homes have a yardstick, less have any kind of scales, and I have yet to find one with a graduated one-gallon measure. We shall continue to use rough estimates and be just as satisfied with the results as in the past.

We know a normal stride is about one yard. We take thirty steps, multiply by three and say the distance is 90 feet.

Our wooden toy shows us that by extending the stride 3½ inches, our 30 steps will equal 30 metres. Convenient, isn't it?

These conversions from standard to metric will only be needed until the changeover is completed. After that there will no more sense in converting pounds to grams than in converting dollars to francs or marks, or any other currency.

There will be an increasing number of conversion charts on the market and we shall spot some apparent discrepancies.

Those printed in America refer to the American gallon which is 4-5 of the Imperial gallon we use. The Amer. Gal. equals 3.78 litres, Imp. Gal. 4.54 litres.

Pounds and ounces will convert the same on both charts. For rough estimates use 28 grams to the ounce and 454 grams to the pound, but watch the charts for avoirdupois and apothecary conversions.

In future columns fe shall be stating approximate metric equivalents to acquaint gardeners with the new system, including measurements of length and temperature.

Temperatures will be in degrees Celsius (sell-chus). Water, as you already know, can exist in three states, solid, liquid and gas (vapor).

Celcius was the fellow who reasoned that temperature should relate to water in its liquid state.

He put some mercury in a glass tube, held it against solid water (ice), and marked the position of the mercury on the tube. He then heated the water to the point of vapor (steam) and marked the tube again. The distance between the two marks was divided into 100 divisions each called a "degree".

Another fellow called it Centigrade (100 graduations) which is exactly the same.

There are two simple ways of converting temperatures to Celsius, the first is nearly accurate, the other out by a degree or so.

Take the number of degrees F. (40 degs.), subtract 32 (leaves 8), divide by 2 (gives us 4) and add about 10 per cent for error (0.4).

That gives us 4.4. degs. C and the chart says it is 4.44 C.

The other way is to divide the degs F., (70 degs.) by 2 (gives us 35), subtract 15, which leaves us with 20 degs. C., but our chart says it should be 21.11 degs. C.

The only other thing we have to memorize is prefixes which denote multiples and fractions. In the metric system we deal with multiples and fractions of 100.

The prefixes which increase the size, end with o or a.

Deca-, 10 times larger; hecto-, 100 times larger; kilo-, 1000 times larger; Mega- (always with a capital M) one million times larger.

Prefixes indicating smaller quantities end with i.

Deci-, one tenth; centi-, one-hundredth; milli-, one thousandth; plus the one exception micro- (ending in o) which indicates something very small, one millionth.

If we just keep the decimal point in the right place we'll have no troubles.

We already know 1, 10, 100; for one-tenth we write 0.1; one-hundredth, 0.01; and one-thousandth 0.001.

The centimetre (100th) becomes 0.01 metre, the millimetre 0.001 m. Instead of playing with unwieldly fractions with different denominators we just juggle zeros and decimal points.

There will be a few new terms to learn, but most of us will never use them since they apply to specific work.

The Are (pron. air) replaces the acre; land measurements will go back to the old hectares.

The symbol for force will be N (Newton), for pressure P (Pascal), for energy J (Joule), for power W (Watt), all names of people connected with the discovery of the different laws of physics.

These are no different to the dozens of terms in the standard system we have never heard mentioned or needed to use.

So stop worrying about the metric changeover. Make the little wooden toy and have some fun with it.

Remember that all the people in the world, excepting Canada, U.S.A., and a few minor states as Tongo and Liberia, now use the streamlined language of the metric system. Think Metric and you'll have no trouble joining them.

WORK FOR WEEK

Work on preparing a raised bed in sheltered spot for sowing broad beans, early peas, and planting garlic and shallots early in February if weather continues as at present.

Prune yellow winter jasmine by cutting off all flowered portions, thus allowing new growths a whole season to mature.

In frost-free greenhouse, sow seeds of snapdragons, herbaceous penstemons, lobelias, for these are slow growing to flowering stage, but do not require more than 45 Deg. F. (7 Deg. C.)

Cover one root of rhubarb with wood box open on top, to encourage growth. Heap loose compost around base for added warmth. Horseradish can be treated similarly if the young leaves are appreciated for winter salads and cooking.

Do whatever clearing work is possible outdoors but don't tramp on wet bare soil. Texture can be harmed by compaction and is noticeable all season until again loosened with ample fibrous compost.

Dismay, Hostility Greet Plan to Boost Publishing

PETERBOROUGH, Ont. (CP) — State Secretary Hugh Faulkner's new program to bolster the fortunes of the Canadian publishing industry was greeted with hostility and dismay Friday by some of the persons who are supposed to benefit.

Publishers, authors and book distributors told Faulkner that the expanded publishing policy, which includes a $1.5-million increase in federal financial aid to domestic publishing, will not solve the financial and cultural dilemma facing the Canadian book and periodical industry.

"I am profoundly disappointed," said Toronto book publisher James Lorimer, the first of a parade of delegates to criticize the program outlined by Faulkner during a two-day conference at Trent University on the state of English-language publishing in Canada.

This is the same statement that we have had every year for three years — nothing new has been added," Lorimer said after Faulkner completed a 30-minute speech to 250 conference delegates and 100 observers.

Others said the policy would have little impact on the domination by big U.S. companies over book and magazine publishing and distribution in Canada.

Faulkner said the government will increase the Canada Council's assistance to the publishing industry to $5.5 million from $4 million, effective April 1, bringing total government aid to book and magazine publishing to more than $7 million annually.

While the Canada Council and the publishers work out details, the government wants the money to be used to finance joint ventures among book and periodical publishers to improve the promotion and distribution of their products.

He said Canada Council money could be used to finance new ways of promoting book reviews, appearances by authors and other programs to increase demand for books by Canadian writers.

He said the government also will establish outlets to sell Canadian books in post offices and other federal buildings and will require "an adequate representation" of Canadian authors on existing newstands in airports and railways stations.

He said the government will consider a system of guaranteed loans for Canadian publishers and will review copyright legislation which publishers say now gives an unfair marketing advantage to their U.S. competitors.

He also served notice on foreign-publishers that the government will seek to broaden foreign control legislation to block takeovers of Canadian publishing houses.

But the legislation only will be introduced if the foreign firms fail to co-operate in voluntary takeover screenings by the government.

He said there was no chance of federal action in three areas where the publishers called for assistance — increases in Canadian book purchases in public libraries, a minimum quota for Canadian books on retail bookshelves, especially for mass-produced paperbacks, and increased use of Canadian textbooks.

All three areas are under provincial jurisdiction "and I can't change them," he said.

Faulkner rebuked the "mindless" critics who say the government has done little to support Canadian publishing.

"Let me put it bluntly," he said. "By any standard I know of, the world of books is pretty heavily subsidized in this country."

Firms Slam Gas Pact

CALGARY (CP) — An "agreement in principle" reached between Ottawa and B.C. would restore natural gas producers in B.C. to their pre-federal budget tax position, B.C. Petroleum Corp. (BCPC) officials said Friday.

More than 300 petroleum industry representatives attended a meeting with BCPC officials headed by Attorney-General Alex Macdonald, minister responsible for the crown corporation, on which the agreement was explained.

Industry spokesmen told BCPC officials that the agreement, which does not include increase in prices paid to producers, is not good enough.

"We will still be operating at a loss," said Charles Dunkley, vice-president of Dome Petroleum Ltd. of Calgary and Immediate past-president of the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada.

Macdonald said the agreement — details of mechanics and implementation still to be worked out — would provide "total relief" for producers of the additional tax burdens as a result of royalty-taxation measures introduced in Finance Minister John Turner's budget.

Producers in B.C. now are paid wellhead prices ranging from 19 to 33 cents and averaging 22 cents per thousand cubic feet while BCPC, which purchases all gas produced in the province, sells it at prices ranging from 55 cents to $1 and averaging 82 cents.

Macdonald said multinational companies "have not lost money" in B.C. but on the other hand, small independent producers have had cash flow shortages for B.C. operations.

"We are prepared to assist the small independents, including advance payments," Macdonald said.

BCPC pays Westcoast Transmission Co. Ltd. of Vancouver — until late 1973 the sole buyer and seller of gas in B.C. and now a common-carrier pipeline company — transportation costs averaging 25 cents per thousand cubic feet, leaving the net average price received by BCPC at 57 cents.

Ottawa considered the 57 cents received by BCPC as the current "fair market value" of gas in B.C. and the difference of 35 cents between the BCPC net price and producer price a form of "disguised royalty." The B.C. government did not accept that interpretation.

EVEN DISGUISED as wizards the Mirror Man (Bob Varga) left, and Toyman (Ian McIntyre) are not entirely on top of the situation when confronted by the witch (Diane Gendron) who is plotting to steal a certain magic book. The scene is from Bastion Children's Theatre production of The Mirror Man which began a series of Saturday matinees this afternoon at 538 Yates. Next performances will be 1 p.m. and 3 p.m. Feb. 1. The play is directed by Gini Lefever.

Private Economists Advising Trudeau

Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Prime Minister Trudeau confirmed Friday that a new group of private economic advisors has been meeting with his office personnel.

Trudeau, responding to questions in the Commons, said the group of professional economists has been coming to Ottawa "on the invitation of my principal secretary Jack Austin.

The prime minister avoiding answering a question as to whether Finance Minister John Turner had been advised about formation of "group of seven," as it was called by Conservative Finance critic Sinclair Stevens.

"If the minister wanted to attend the meetings he could," Trudeau said. "But their meetings are not attended at the ministerial level; I myself only dropped in once to meet them."

Had Turner actually attended any of the meetings? Stevens asked.

"No, not to my knowledge," replied Trudeau.

The prime minister, responding to a barrage of questions, said the group of professional economists had been coming to Ottawa occasionally "in order to keep my office informed on matters of economic importance which, in their opinion, indicate a true reflection of their view of the economic health of Canada."

Trudeau's answers did nothing to deny reports that Turner was disturbed by secret formation of the advisory group to parallel a function generally regarded as being strictly in the finance department's domain.

Reports that Turner was deeply disturbed by formation of the new group have added to speculation that the finance minister might step out of the government this year. It has been rumored that he might be offered, and accept, the presidency of the World Bank when Robert McNamara retires this year.

In the Commons, however, Turner was the focal point of persistent questioning by Conservative leader Robert Stanfield on the government's discussions with business and labor about inflation.

Turner appeared to backtrack from earlier statements that the government would seek a concensus from various groups in the economy on an equitable division of Canada's economic wealth.

Referring to his meeting with the Canadian Labor Congress earlier this week, Turner said "we made a good beginning and had a good discussion."

Stanfield demanded to know what the government is trying to achieve.

"What's he talking about . . . has the government some aim," Stanfield asked.

If an understanding, and co-operation are to develop in the fight against inflation there must be a dialogue, Turner replied. "There's no way you are going to develop a co-operative way to "ratchet down inflation" without a dialogue.

Turner reminded the opposition leader that the Canadian people had rejected price and incomes controls in the last election. In view of that the government was taking a different approach.

George Hees, (PC — Northumberland Durham) suggested the finance minister take a bold step, as had been taken by President Ford in the U.S., and cut taxes to get the economy moving.

Turner invited Hees to read his November budget speech where he would find that he had already taken the steps now being taken by President Ford.

(Closed Saturday and Sunday)

VESPERS SERVICES

Emmanuel Baptist Church youth minister Norman Barton will speak on The Verification of the Bible at the church's Sunday vesper service at 6:15 p.m.

A different speaker is scheduled each week in this ongoing service now covering the topic of the Bible's validity today.

The vespers are specially designed for young adults, but everyone is welcome.

Dunhill Development Corp. 'Public Housing Agency'

Dunhill Development Corp., the provincial government's housing company, has been granted the power to act as a "public housing agency."

Housing Minister Lorne Nicolson said the change, released in cabinet orders Friday, is a "technical convenience" that will allow Dunhill to act directly with the federal government's Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

"Dunhill is doing more in the area of government projects," said Nicolson, adding Dunhill will continue to perform in the construction and development areas, and will not finance projects.

He said new powers could be equated with duties given to other provincial housing authorities like the Ontario Housing Corporation.

The cabinet order said change was for purposes of "supervising, devloping, maintaining, improving and disposing of housing."

Also released was the appointment of Provincial Secretary Ernie Hall and Economic Development Minister Gary Lauk as directors of the B.C. Development Corporation for three year terms.

Baby's Body Found

SEATTLE (AP) — The skeleton of a young child believed to be four-year-old Heidi Peterson, whose disappearance last Feb. 21 triggered a well-publicized nationwide search, was found Thursday under blackberry bushes about one block from her home. Police said at the time they were almost certain the girl had been abducted.

10 Executed

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Ten men died publicly before a firing squad Thursday for agitating against a government decree granting equal rights to women. The National Security Court sentenced the men to death last week after finding them guilty of exploiting religion to cause national disunity and of subverting the authority of the state.

MIDDLEMAN WINS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Soaring middleman costs accounted for more than four-fifths of last year's retail grocery price increase in the U.S., agriculture department figures show.

A market basket of food items cost U.S. consumers an average of $33.65 a week in 1974, an increase of $4.09 a week from 1973. But farmers got only 63 cents of the weekly increase while middlemen took a $3.46 bite. The figures were released Friday.

Department officials said that in all the average cost of a 1974 food market basket was $1,750 for the full 12 months. That was an increase of $213 from 1973. The middleman's share of the increase was $180 while the farmer's accounted for $33 during the year.

The $1,750 cost for the full year's market basket included $1,016 for the middlemen who transport, process and sell food, a 21.5-per-cent larger share than in 1973. The farm portion, meanwhile, was $734 last year, an increase of 4.7 per cent from all of 1973.

3 bedrooms, living room with w-w propilon carpet, slate fireplace, teak feature wall, most attractive and practical galley-type kitchen with walnut cabinets and loads of drawers, double sink with spray, corion floor with 7'x8' shag carpeted eating area with window and feature wall enhanced by expensive chandelier. 2 good-sized bedrooms, main floor with quality propilon carpet and large, louvered—door closets. Attractive 5-pce. bathroom. The basement is where you will do 80% of your living. The "theme" is Big Bad Johns, Barney's Hide-Away, you name it. Artistically designed, old brick features combined with expertly applied rough shakes, accented with antique wine barrels embedded in old brick. An antique "pot belly" stove is a focal point for artistic creativity, beside aged wagon wheel mortared into old brick. Bookcase on one wall built in to accommodate stereo and your favorite classics. The above describes your family room. Now for your rec. room which is right in-line with your family room, to expand your small parties into big ones. 11' L-shaped bar with stools makes you a professional at party time. "Manshard" shake roof above bar hides the recessed lighting. Lounge area tables. Rich w-w shag carpet completes the warmth of this relaxing atmoxsphere. Third large bedroom is off rec. room with 2-pce. bathroom, laundry room off entertainment-size, fibreglassed quality sundeck that gives you loads of privacy. BELOW-AVERAGE RUNS SEEN FOR SALMON

VANCOUVER (CP) — Below average runs of most species of salmon in most British Columbia coastal waters are predicted by the fisheries department this year.

Exceptions are the Skeena and Nass River fisheries, where above average returns of spawning sockeye are expected.

The predictions were made in a statement of expectations for salmon returns for 1975 based on recorded spawning escapements in previous cycle years, water flows, winter conditions and observations of fry survival.

Fishermen had been told earlier that the Fraser River sockeye run is anticipated to be considerably smaller this year than in 1974 and the 1971 cycle year.

Maple Bay Appeal

The next round in the fight by Maple Bay residents to quash a bylaw allowing a massive housing project on Mount Tzouhalem is slated for next Wednesday.

The Committee of Maple Bay Road Residents will be in the British Columbia Court of Appeal, appealing the decision of Mr. Justice H. C. McKay of the British Columbia Supreme Court last January, which allowed the controversial 505-acre development to go ahead.

The fight to quash the bylaw, passed by the North Cowichan municipal council, allowing Kingsview Properties of Vancouver to build a 1,500-unit complex within 10 years, has lasted two years.

Residents claim the project will ruin the rural atmosphere, choke roads with traffic and threaten fire prevention because of inadequate access to and from the subdivision.

At the moment all construction on the site has been stopped, awaiting the decision from the B.C. court of appeal. A company spokesman said Tuesday that if the bylaw is upheld work will be renewed almost immediately.

Stagecraft Workshops

A grant for three weekend workshops at Langham Court Theatre has been awarded Victoria Theatre Guild by Theatre Canada's professional training program which is funded by Canada Council.

First of the workshops will begin Friday at 7:30 p.m., continuing Saturday and Sunday, Feb. 1 and 2.

The workshop will be conducted by Bindon Kinghorn of UVic theatre department, whose subject will be stagecraft, with particular emphasis on economic sets utilizing materials already on hand in the theatre.

Dates for the other two workshops, to be conducted by Giles Hogya on lighting and John Krich on directing, will be announced shortly.

SIGNS 'RUIN BUSINESS'

B.C. Hydro's no-parking signs are ruining business on Johnson Street, according to Victoria's lighthouse philosopher Bill Scott.

In a letter to city council, Scott said "B.C. Hydro bureaucrats and their underlings" put up the no-parking signs without any prior warning.

Hydro officials said the signs were placed on lower Johnson, where Scott runs a pawn shop, because traffic and parked cars would otherwise hamper crews installing new underground wiring.

The most "shocking episode" of all occurred this week, said Scott, when he parked his car in front of his own store for just a few minutes and came out to find a ticket on his windshield.

Those kinds of incidents, he said, "encourages hatred of the citizens against subservient bureaucratic policemen."

INVITATION TO TENDER
City of Prince Rupert, B.C.

Naval Base a Bargain

LONDON (AP) — Anyone want a naval base on Africa's southernmost tip where the Atlantic and Indian oceans meet?

It will be available soon, complete with the biggest dry-cock between Europe and Singapore and a fine communications system.

And cheap too, for Simonstown is a good, going concern.

Politically, though, the cost to a new tenant would be high because South Africa, which owns the place, is in bad repute with much of the rest of the world because of its strict race policies.

Britian's Labor government is phasing out its lease, which began in 1795.

In today's race-conscious world, with Britain trying to live down its imperial past, military co-operation with the South Africans has become a headache. Each time British and South African warships exercise together a political storm breaks at home and protests pour in from abroad.

The British have made their intentions plain even though Prime Minister Harold Wilson's move to disengage has been hotly assailed by political foes. South Africans have suggested that both the United States and France would be ready to move into Simonstown.

But authorized American officials have spread word that President Ford's administration is not interested in taking over. So, too, has France, and no other allied power seems qualified to take on the commitment even if it wanted to.

Britian's readiness to let its 20-year defence pact with South Africa "wither on the vine," as Foreign Secretary James Callaghan put it recently, does not mean Simonstown's facilities are not valued by allied strategists.

Military planners within the North Atlantic Alliance (NATO) have recognized the importance of keeping the sea lanes around the Cape of Good Hope safe. Tens of thousands of merchantmen, allied warships and tankers carrying Persian Gulf oil to Europe pass around the cape.

NATO men have prepared emergency arrangements to keep open the sea lanes during crises even though cape waters lie well south of NATO's limits.

The reason for allied — and South African — concern is the ever-swelling Soviet naval presence in the Indian Ocean, latest U.S. intelligence shows the Russians with 12 combat and 18 auxiliary vessels in the region. They are deployed mainly near the Persian Gulf.

With the reopening of the Suez Canal expected next spring, even more Soviet warships are likely to show up.

The Americans, in contrast, have one flagship and two destroyers in the area. From time to time task forces sail west from the Pacific and other groups probably will do so from the Mediterranean.

NATO powers have concluded it is simply not good politics to associate with South Africa, whose apartheid policies are assailed throughout the non-white world. Indeed, only an American-British-French veto in the United Nationsl Security Council last fall saved South Africa from expulsion.

Callaghan recalled recently that when Britian and South Africa signed their naval defence pact in 1955 there were only five independent African states. Today there are 42. This, then, has transformed things.

American officials have insisted they neither encouraged nor discouraged the British to continue naval co-operation with South Africa. The Americans themselves stopped all that themselves a decade ago. Like the British they observe a UN embargo on the sale of arms to South Africa.

The American officials said they are not worried about "losing" Simonstown.

In a big war the base, and indeed all South African ports, would hardly be denied to South Africa's friends. In a big war, too, the action likely would be elsewhere.

U.S. authorities can count on other facilities in the Indian ocean. Their warships can, for instance, resupply in Monbasa, Kenya. They hope to do so too in Lourenco Marques and Beira after Mozambique becomes independent some time next year.

And finally they anticipate starting early 1975 with Britain in developing anchorage, storage, air staging and other facilities on the coral isle of Diego Garcia, part of the Chagos Peninsula.

AN EYE FOR THE GIRLS is echoed in the multitude of "eyes" in the spread-tail plumage of this peacock as he fans his tail in a South Carolina zoo in practice for the spring courting season.

Social Workers Given Freer Rein, Says Levi

Social workers in the field have been granted much greater decision-making power within the welfare system, Human Resourcds Minister Norm Levi said Friday.

"When we (the NDP) came in, we said to the people in the field you'll have to start making decisions based on individual cases — and 95 per cent of those decisions have been darn good," Levi said.

Field workers in the human resources department have a great deal of experience in dealing with people and they are now able to be fairly flexible in handling special cases within the welfare system, he said.

Levi was commenting on the case of two young men who came to the Times with the story of how welfare officials had thwarted their efforts to get off social assistance by starting a business of their own.

Terrance Purdem and Randall Epp met in hospital last fall and have both been on welfare since they were released in December and October respectively.

Purdem has been a log-scaler for several years and has organized a project cutting fence lengths for a Victoria resisent.

The pair will be paid $600 for the job, said Purdem, and they hope to use that money to launch a full-time business cutting fence lengths and firewood and doing other wood cutting jobs.

"Once we get this thing started we'll be able to get off welfare right away and support ourselves — that's what we want to do," said Purdem.

The problem is the two men have had to rent a truck and other tools for the job and they have run out of money to pay the rental and gas costs.

They wanted the human resources department to give them a stake of $100 to $200 to enable them to pay those costs.

"We're asking for $100 right now so we can earn that $600 and get rolling," he said.

Social assistance grants the men $160 each a month but their January assistance has already gone into living expenses and they won't receive more money until the end of the month.

A spokesman for the local welfare office which rejected their bid said the two men have been given "every help they can be given."

"The social assistance program is meant to help people with current living expenses and we're not in the business of helping new business ventures," he said.

Levi explained that field workers can make financial allotments up to $500 for special cases and funds are often provided for welfare recipients to buy tools or clothing or for travel "if a job situation is confirmed."

"But we have to assess the viability of each proposal," he said.

"I constantly receive letters from people on welfare who say if they can get X number of dollars they could get off welfare," said Levi. "I refer them to the field worker who assesses the project and the ability of the individual to carry out what he wants to do."

Levi said there are appeal mechanisms through the department if people want to fight the field workers' decisions.

But if people on welfare are really eager to work they are probably better off to find a job through regualr channels, he said. "If they really have that kind of drive they can find jobs."

Purdem and Epp could not be reached today to find out what their next step will be.

Up-to-Date List On Draft Dodgers

WINNIPEG (CP) — A Winnipeg-based organization established to advise draft evaders and deserters from the U.S. says thousands of draft evaders can now return to the U.S. without fear of arrest or prosecution.

In a news release, the War Resistor Information Program (WRIP), said Senator Edward Kennedy received from the justice department Friday a complete and up-to-date list of all draft evaders who are under indictment or investigation.

Persons not on the list will not be prosecuted if they return to the U.S., while many of those on the list may be able to get their charges dropped. WRIP program co-ordinator Tim Maloney said WRIP could provide advice on this matter.

In preparing the list, the justice department had asked its U.S. district attorneys to review all outstanding draft evasion cases and report on their status.

The review reaffirmed that more than nine out of 10 men who evaded the draft no longer have charges; it also prompted the dismissal of 1,500 indictments.

Senator Kennedy has passed the list on to four organizations, including WRIP. Interested persons can determine their legal status by phoning a toll-free Winnipeg number, 800-665-8885.

The other organizations to receive copies of the list are the American Civil Liberties Union, the Clemency Information Centre, and the United Church of Christ.

Maloney said he was pleased and surprised to learn that the list was being made available.

"What it means is that men can now, for the first time easily determine their legal status," he said. "Thousands — the vast majority of the men in Canada — will not be on the list, and thus they will be free to visit or live in the U.S."

MANITOBA BOOSTS CAR INSURANCE

WINNIPEG (CP) — Owners of more expensive automobiles will pay up to 55 per cent more this year for insurance from the Manitoba Public Insurance Corp.

Insurance Minister Bill Uruski said the increases are justified "by the extremely high values for which these luxury cars now retail."

The increases are larger than the minister had indicated earlier this month, when the first announcement about premium rates for 1975 was made.

At that time, Uruski talked in terms of increases up to 40 per cent for luxury cars and smaller increases for other vehicles.

Examples of the increases outlined Wednesday by the minister include:

—1974 Lincoln Continental Mark IV, $285, up 55 per cent.

—1972 Buick Estate Wagon, $205, up 42 per ent.

1973 Chevrolet Impala, $188, up 31 per cent.

—1973 Ford Ltd, $188, up 21 per cent.

Each of the examples covers driving for pleasure and to and from work and includes $100 deductible collision insuranec and $300,000 third-party liability.

College 'New Year' Next Week

The public has been invited to celebrate Chinese New Year Feb. 8 with the students and faculty of Lester B. Pearson College of the Pacific.

Chinese cultural activities including caligraphy, Chinese music, a display of paintings, literature, costume and art works will be offered between 2 and 6 p.m. in the college administration building.

The public will be able to join Dr. Wee Chong Tan in an informal discussion of Chinese philosophy and Prof. Richard Liu will give a lecture with slides on the development of Chinese painting.

An earlier report that the celebration would be held today was erroneous.

Prisoner Stabbed

(a) Wishes to keep the KBP free to move. The Knight still has plenty of mobility.

(b) After 8. P-B4, White did not care for B-N5. Thus he wants his Knight on KB2 before he plays P-KB4.

(c) Plays into White's hands. Much better is 8 . . . . P-Q4.

(d) The thematic attack on the Q's side. Hug doesn't care.

(e) Attack is the best defence.

(f) The correct move for Black would have been 16 . . . N2-K4.

(g) Well-played.

(h) Hug, with the title already in the bag, here offered Rogoff a draw, which the latter accepted quickly. Mate by White was only five moves away.

THE FOX OUT-FOXED

The following game was played last year in the Parnu, Estonia, tournament which was won by Leonid Stein. A runner-up was Paul Keres.

WHITE: Stein
BLACK: Keres

U.S. Businessmen Damned Either Way

OTTAWA (CP) — Legislation slowly working through the resumed parliamentary session seems sure to confront some U.S. businessmen with being damned if they do and damned if they don't.

If they don't permit sales from their Canadian subsidiaries to Communist countries such as Cuba, they will run afoul of the pending legislation.

If they do permit such exports, they will be breaking two strong U.S. laws in effect for years and irritants in Canada-U.S. relations.

Either law provides fines and jail terms for transgressors. But there is unlikely to be any change in Washington's ability to reject sales from U.S. subsidiaries in Canada to Communist states.

This permission includes re-export of U.S.-manufacter items — say a small part in a commodity largely manufactured in Canada.

The Canadian situation is this:

Approval in principle has been given to two bills, on combines and corporations, that include sections designed to ensure that foreign law does not dictate the actions of foreign subsidiaries in Canada.

If exports by those subsidiaries are not in conflict with Canadian law, then U.S. subsidiaries here could do business with Communist countries including enemies of the U.S.

This runs counter to provisions of the U.S. Trading with the Enemy Act and the more specific Export Administration Act. Those acts confront U.S. citizens, resident inside or outside the U.S., with jail terms and fines for permitting exports to certain countries.

The two laws affect individuals — company directors or officers in Canada or the U.S. — and companies.

There have been numerous examples of their impact on Canadian exports ranging from trucks for China to flour, locomotives and office furniture for Cuba.

Former City Skater Killed

A former Victorian, well-known in figure-skating circles, has died as the result of injuries suffered in a car accident in Portland on Wednesday.

Funeral services for Verna Pedneault Patterson, 33, will be held at 11 a.m. Tuesday at Our Lady of the Rosary Church in Langford.

Mrs. Patterson, born in Victoria, was the granddaughter of the late Matthew (Matt) Fagan, one of the best-known members of the Victoria Figure Skating Club.

Mrs. Patterson turned professional with Ice Capades, served briefly as the teaching professional at Prince George and, more recently, at the Jansen Beach Skating Club in Portland.

Survivors include a son, Tod, and a daughter, Kimberley.

SHIPYARD HUMMING

First of three 65-foot patrol boats being constructed for the federal department of the environment by Philbrook's Shipyard of Sidney is scheduled to be launched in eight weeks.

The other two will follow at 30-day intervals.

Total value of the contract is $1.4 million. Two similar vessels had been constructed for the federal government in 1974.

The shipyard also has contracts for four sailboats and for $90,000 worth of work on a 60-foot aluminum boat.

Theft 'Surveys'

SURREY (CP) — RCMP say a group of youths on the B.C. lower mainland are setting people up for robberies by conducting telephone surveys.

An RCMP spokesman said residents of this Vancouver suburb have received phone calls from a woman asking if they watch television, if they own a color set and whether they have a stereo system. The woman claims to be conducting a survey on television habits, although she does not ask what kind of programs or what channels residents watch, RCMP say.

THE CORPORATION OF THE CITY OF VICTORIA
NOTICE OF HEARINGS

"ZONING BY-LAW, 1956, AMENDMENT BY-LAWS (Nos. 388, 389, 391, 392, 393, 397 and 401), 1974"

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that all persons deeming their interest in property affected by the above-mentioned draft Zoning Bylaw Amendements (Nos. 388, 389, 391, 392, 393, 397 and 401) will be afforded an opportunity to be heard on the matters contained therein before the City Council at a Public Hearing to be held in the Council Chamber, City Hall, on THURSDAY, the 30th day of JANUARY, 1975, at 2:00 p.m.

DRAFT BY-LAW AMENDEMENT (No. 388) provides for ONLY:

The establishing of a new zoning category to regulate "Special Heavy Industrial Districts" as follows:

1. By-law Number 4382 is amended by enacting the following as Section 1.16A thereof:

"1.16A 'Heavy Industry' shall mean all industry, including primary and secondary manufacturing, light industry, and all business activity other than manufacturing, but exclusing the business of providing human accommodation."

2. By-law Number 4382 is further amended by adding after the words and figures "Part 13A M-3T Zones — Tank Farm Districts" where the same appear in Section 2 thereof, the following words and figures:

"Part 13B M-3S Zones — Special Heavy Industrial Districts."

3. By-law Number 4382 is further amended by adding after the words and figures "M-3T Zone comprising all Tank Farm Districts" in Part 3.1 thereof the following words and figures:

"M-3S Zone comprising all Special Heavy Industrial Districts."

4. By-law Number 4382 is further amended by enacting as Part 13B thereof the following:

"PART 13B
M-3S ZONE
Special Heavy Industrial Districts

General

13B.1 No building or structure or part or parts thereof shall be erected or used and no land shall be used in a Special Heavy Industrial District except for the following uses and in accordance with the regulations contained in this part, subject to the provisions of the Municipal Act.

Uses Permitted: 13B.2 The said uses are as follows:

Specific Uses

13B.2.1 All uses permitted in the M-1, M-2 and M-3 Zones with the exception of dwellings.

Dwelling for a Watchman

13B.2.2 Notwithstanding Section 13B.2.1 a dwelling may be erected and may be used for the sole purpose of accommodating a watchman and his family if such use is ancillary to the main use of the same parcel of land, and such main use is for purposes other than human habitation.

Heavy Industry — 13B.2.3 Heavy industry, without limitation.

Set-backs, Heights, Building and Yard Requirements

13B.3 In respect of buildings and uses permitted under Section 13B.2 the most restrictive requirements applicable to similar uses in the M-1, M-2 and M-3 Zones shall apply with respect to the height and bulk of buildings, set-backs, yards and courts."

5. By-law Number 4382 is further amended by enacting the following as Section 13.2.3 of Part 13 thereof:

"Heavy Industrial Uses

13.2.3 Heavy Industry other than

(a) an industry that is noxious or offensive to the public in general or to the immediate neighborhood thereof by reason of the emission of odours, dust, smoke, gas or noise; or

(b) an 'offensive trade' as defined by Section 65 of the Health Act or by any future legislation supplementing or repealing the said Section 65, whether or not permission therefor has been obtained under the provisions of the Health Act."

DRAFT BY-LAW AMENDEMENT (No. 389) provides for ONLY:

The deletion of Section 5B.4.4 which requires minimum lot widths and site areas for conversion from single family to duplex or multiple dwelling of buildings constructed prior to 1931.

DRAFT BY-LAW AMENDMENT (No. 391) provides for ONLY:

The substitution of the following section for Section 11.2.14 in "M-1 Limited Light Industrial" Districts:

"11.2.14 Retail sales, as an accessory business, of goods of a kind manufactured, repaired, cleaned, stored or otherwise handled in the primary use of the premises if such primary use is one permitted under the provisions of Sections 11.2.1 to 11.2.13."

DRAFT BY-LAW AMENDEMENT (No. 392) provides for ONLY:

The enacting of the following section as Section 11.2.16 in "M-1 Limited Light Industrial" Districts:

"11.2.16 Private and public schools and trade schools."

DRAFT BY-LAW AMENDEMENT (No. 393) provides for ONLY:

(a) The deletion of Subsection (1) of Section 8A.7 and the substitution therefor of the following in "C-1S Limited Commercial Service Station" Districts:

"(1) Any painting of automobiles or repairs to any part of the chassis, frames, transmission, drive train, or exterior portion or portions of the body of a motor vehicle or to any externally mounted automotive accessory other than a lamp, licence plate, windshield wiper, mirror, bumper guide, wheel or tire, provided that for the purpose of this section 'repairs' shall not include removal followed by replacement only with a new part or accessory of the same kind."

(b) The addition of the following section of Section 10.4.12.1 in "T-1 Limited Transient Accommodation Districts":

"(v) Establishments with one hundred (100) or more transient accommodation units located on one site, and in respect of which there is a subsisting public-house licence issued pursuant ot the Government Liquor Act, as amended."

DRAFT BY-LAW AMENDEMENT (No. 397) provides for ONLY:

The rezoning of certain properties from "C-2 Commercial," "M-1 Limited Light Industrial" and "M-2 Light Industrial" Districts to "T-1 Transient Accommodation," "R-3 Multiple Dwelling," "CA4 Central Area Commercial Office," "CA3 Central Area General Commercial" and "CA3C Old Town" Districts as follows:

2. By-law Number 4382 is amended by excluding from the lands described under the heading "Zone C-2, Commercial Districts" in Appendix "A" of the said by-law and by adding to the lands described under the heading "Zone T-1, Limited Transient Accommodation Districts" in Appendix "A" of the said by-law the following lands:

Rights 'Inaction' Draws Blast

elizabeth forbes

Now that Parliament has resumed down in Ottawa, will the government give any sort of priority to a Bill authorizing the setting up of a federal Human Rights Commission?

Four years have passed since the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in Canada, tabled its report with 167 recommendations.

Among the 122 that came within the jurisdiction of the federal government was No. 165 which read:

"That a federal Human Rights Commission be set up that would (a) be directly responsible to Parliament, (b) have power to investigate the administration of human rights legislation as well as the power to enforce the law by laying charges and persecuting offenders, (c) include within the organization for a period of seven to 10 years a division dealing specifically with the protection of women's rights and (d) suggest changes in human rights legislation and promote widespread respect for human rights."

Answering queries in 1973, it was announced that the Department of Justice, together with the Department of the Secretary of State, had been giving serious consideration (with cabinet approval) to the creation of a federal organization that would concern itself with the human rights of all Canadians, not only women.

Immediately the Advisory Council on the Status of Women (Dr. Katie Cooke, chairman), commended the Government of Canada for its announced intention to establish a Human Rights Commission and urged that Legislation to this affect be introduced as early as possible in the next session of parliament, opening on February 26, 1974.

Nothing came of this. No legislation was introduced at that session, which finally prorogued because of the election. Nor has anything been said or done since the present government took office.

With this in mind, at a three-day meeting held recently, the Advisory Council on the Status of Women, strongly condemned the federal government for producing nothing but "ineffectual promises" on the human rights legislation.

Dr. Cooke said "I think it's an absolute disgrace — over two years is too long to take to put a principle into action."

Then the 30-member group sent a wire to Marc Lalonde, minister responsible for the status of women. It read:

"The ACSW strongly condemns the federal government for its inaction on Human Rights legislation. As early as July, 1973, this legislation was clearly identified as the ACSW priority and in December, 1973, cabinet approval was announced. The action of the federal government to date has consisted of nothing but ineffectual promises. ACSW demands immediate introduction of the human rights legislation."

At the ACSW meeting it was also pointed out that only one small piece of legislation has been passed dealing with specific status of women concerns since the council was formed. And a call went out for a review of action taken by the government since the ACSW was established.

In this connection the vice-president, Mme. Yvette Rousseau said "if the government wants to maintain credibility with the public in regard to the ACSW, it must immediately vote laws that will create justice and equality in our society, composed as it is of as many women as men."

A new release from the meeting says there was also unanimous consent, further, "to ask the government to take action now to fill vacant deputy minister posts with competent women." (There is only one woman with deputy minister level at the moment.)

Firm recommendations were made and will be sent to government, dealing with citizenship, passports, Family Court, international conventions, and sharing of the Canada Pension Plan with husbands ad wives — "a first step towards recognizing housewives as part of the real economic life of the country."

Banking, rape and family planning were named as further on-going concerns.

Next meetting of the federal Advisory Council on the Status of Women, will be held in Ottawa in April.

First meeting of the federal group with provincial status of women councils will be held in Toronto at the end of this month, when matters of overlapping federal jurisdiction will be discussed.

VEILS DROPPING IN KUWAIT

By AUDREY TOPPING

KUWAIT (NYT)—"In Saudi Arabia we are accused of being loose women," Princess Hussa al-Sabah said with a smile as she drove her Cadillac past the fashionable French boutiques in downtown Kuwait City.

The daughter of Sheikh Sabah al-Salem al-Sabah, the ruling Emir of this oil-rich Arab state on the Persian Gulf, was comparing her lifestyle with that of the wealthy women of neighboring Saudi Arabia.

"We too obey the laws of the Koran," she said. "My husband, for instance, is a very religious man. He prays five times a day, but he still lets me wear a swim suit on the riviera. And now I am learning to fly a plane."

Princess Hussa, a slim, attractive woman of 26, is married to a senior government official. They have one child. Like many other young women of Kuwait, she insists on a life of her own. The Princess, who speaks several languages, studies English literature at the University of Kuwait and, when she so chooses, goes out unescorted to tour the art galleries, shop for her designer clothes or visit her friends.

Such freedom for women is unknown in Saudi Arabia where women are forbidden to drive cars or hold office jobs, they may work only as teachers in girls' schools, aides to social workers or as doctors. Women may not mingle with men other than their husbands or relatives in any public place. Even the zoo is open on separate days for men and women.

On the street and in the market places of the cities and villages, women pass by as dark shadows veiled in black from head to foot. The veil ma ynot be lowered even for a passport photo and photographers are forbidden to take pictures of Saudi women on the street.

In Kuwait, some women still wear veils in public in keeping with the older tradition, but it is not obligatory as in Saudi Arabia. For most Kuwait women, the break with the past came in 1956 when a group of them put on a public demonstration and defiantly dropped their veils.

In Saudi Arabia, if a Saudi woman dares to venture out without the traditional garb, the matow'ah, who are the religious police, are empowered to spray her legs with black paint.

Such attitudes toward women are colliding, however, with the efforts of the Saudi government to modernize swiftly and, with its billions of dollars in oil revenues, to develop the structure of the society. The government is under pressure to enlarge the role of women simply because many of its ambitious programs are being frustrated by a critical shortage of manpower.

Kuwait, which suffers from the same lack of manpower, years ago turned to its women, granting them the right to enter the civil service.

Kuwait leaders are trying to insulate young women and men from the corruptions of the West and a superabundance of money by emphasizing ethics drawn from the Koran and the traditions of their Bedouin forefathers, who a few decades ago lived in desert tents.

In Saudi Arabia, there is the same effort to blend traditional values with Western innovations, and to enjoy the best of both worlds. "We believe great wealth and moral righteousness can coexist," a prominent sheikh said, "but we must be extremely careful to protect our young people from corruption."

For Saudi women, this has meant seclusion, no political rights, and, until King Faisal intervened, no schooling.

King Faisal, who mounted the throne in 1964, is a Moslem fundamentalist and the chief protector of the Islam faith in the Arab world.

When he sought to introduce education for women, he was bitterly opposed by religious conservatives. He finally declared there was no law in the Koran barring such education and opened schools for girls. In some areas, he had to back up his decree with a show of military force. Today, there are as many schools for girls as for boys but none are coed.

Wafers, Cheese With Fruit Salad

By MARY MOORE

Canada's Food Rule on Fruit is our subject today: "One serving of citrus fruit or tomatoes or their juices and one serving of other fruit per day."

This is a tall order these days with fruit prices so high but we pay a much higher price for poor health so we must do our best to make ends meet.

In Canada apples are a staple fruit all winter. We all know "an apple a day keeps the doctor away" but we do not all know why. One large apple weights seven ounces or approximately 175 grams and has about 90 calories. It contains calcium, phosphorous, iron, B Vitamins and traces of C.

Recent nutrition emphasis has been placed on eating WHOLE oranges as the important "bio flavinoids" found in the orange pulp and the delicate membranes surrounding the individual juice cells help to strengthen the tiny blood vessels of the body and thus give resistance to colds and other infections. Another mysterious nutrient "protopectins" found in the WALLS of the juice sacs and segments are an important aid in digestive processes. So peel your orange and eat the sections. One average orange has 70 calories and all oranges, grapefuuit, lemons and limes — the citrus fruits — are high in Vitamin C.

Reducers are anxious about the caloric content of bananas — 100 calories for an average-sized one — but they should not neglect them for they have calcium, phosphorous, iron and B Vitamins and when thoroughly ripe are an almost indispensable item for infant and bland diets.

To make the best of these fruits I have designed an individual salad which can be served as a dessert with fancy wafers and cheese. This is always popular and is a beauty.

DESSERT FRUIT SALAD

2 red dessert apples
2 oranges
2 bananas
1-3 c. chopped nuts
genuine mayonnaise
Bibb lettuce
whipped white cream cheese

Core the apples and cut into eight equal crescents unpeeled. Brush with lemon juice to prevent browning.

Peel oranges and divide into sections. (If you feel you must, peel membranes from sections.)

Peel bananas and cut each in halves lengthwise and crosswise twice (6 pieces each). Immediately coat sparingly with mayonnaise and dip in chopped nuts.

Arrange choice Bibb lettuce leaves on each of 4 tea plates. Arrange prepared fruits alternately in a wheel shape on lettuce. Pipe rosettes of whipped white cream cheese at centre. NOTES: Other fruits such as grapefruit, pineapple and avocado may be used as a variation. Remember to prepare fresh fruit salads at the last minute to conserve their vitamins.

'LET CHILDREN RUN OWN GAMES'

OTTAWA (CP) — Violence in sport would be reduced sharply if children ran their own games, a University of Ottawa psychologist said Thursday.

Dr. Terry Orlick told an Ontario Recreation Society meeting that a recent study showed almost 100 per cent of 300 young hockey players interviewed did not like fighting and aggression in sport.

More than 80 per cent of the children rated fun as very important. More than 70 per cent wanted to play in games that didn't involve winning. Pressure to score goals was a major deterrent to having fun.

Children should be sitting on recreation committees, Dr. Orlick said. Ideally, they should run leagues and officiate at games.

He said a seven-year-old once suggested that games be played backwards — that when one team scored, the other team would get the point.

The idea was tried with children in a broomball game, he said. The child who scored a goal went to the opposing team and one from the other side switched, maintaining a balance.

When the game ended all thought they were winners.

Dr. Orlick said studies show that when a child is cut from a team because he is not as good as others, the child's self-esteem falls.

Resort clothes from the cote d'azur . . .

Who should know better than those talented young designers on the French Riviera just what makes for perfect resort clothes? . . . they're in a class by themselves! . . . But you don't need to hop a jet for France in order to acquire an outfit or two . . . because Eaton's Import Room has just received some lovely new things from Tiktiner of Nice . . . Just looking at them conjures up visions of the romantic cote d'azur . . . the sparkling blue water of the Mediterranean . . . white sandy beaches . . . golden sunsets! . . . There's a superbly simple cotton dress shaded like a muted rainbow . . . A beautifully tailored white cotton blazer with silky self-stripe woven in . . . matching pants and a skirt in the new long length, buttoning down the front and cut on the bias so that it's a full circle . . . To team up with these is a navy crinkle cotton shirt printed with white elongated figures of elegant ladies . . . Makes a stunning resort outfit . . . everything co-ordinated, but sold separately so you can have just the pieces you want . . . We almost forgot to mention the short sleeved Chanel-type white cardigan with navy stripes . . . another plus for this co-ordinated foursome! . . . A Tiktiner dress, which comes in either gold or coral has a scoop neck and crosses over in the back . . . ties in front . . . Big patch pockets on the wide skirt . . . Other new European arrivals are from Knitalia of Italy . . . a lovely wrap around skirt in a sea wave design with big poppies . . . blue and white . . . little ribbed top edged with matching blue . . . Eaton's Import Room, 382-7141, local 242.

For those with slender waistlines, one way to give a new look to an old shirtdress is to wrap the waist in cummerbund or obi fashion.

Clark's shoes for children now at Wilson's . . .

We heard that some pretty nice things for the younger generation had just arrived at Wilson's Junior Shop, so went in last Monday to have a look with a view to telling you about them . . . Very rewarding it was, too! . . . First of all, Wilson's are now carrying Clark's shoes for children . . . those English "desert boots" we're sure you've heard about, even though you may never have owned a pair yourself . . . They're wonderfully sturdy and support a child's foot to perfection . . . Made of English suede split leather with leather lining and crepe soles . . . These Clark's shoes for children are a "first" in Victoria, and exclusive to Wilson's . . . May be worn by either girls or boys . . . and come in infants size 4 to children's size 3 . . . Not inexpensive, we'll admit . . . but we do think they're worth their price! . . . Wilson's have just received a shipment of Peter Scott lambswool and Shetland sweaters . . . V-neck cardigans . . . Pullovers with V, crew and turtle necks . . . in shades like oatmeal, Hyland blue, Kenya red, navy green, grey, brown and yellow . . . Like the boots, these sweaters are sturdy and hard-wearing . . . will take a lot of punishment . . . Pullovers are equally appropriate for girls and boys, though the cardigans are designed for boys only . . . And now we come to the little ones . . . meaning infants from birth up to 24 months . . . For them there are the most adorable little Swiss dresses you've ever laid eyes on! . . . 100% cotton treated to be mini-care . . . they all have yokes with cross-over back which can be adjusted . . . Dainty embroidery and eyelet . . . often over a skirt in contrasting pastel color . . . Also some sweet embroidered ginghams . . . We guarantee you'll lose your heart to these little beauties . . . W & J Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177 and 1210 Newport Ave., 592-2821.

Prints for spring are the prettiest on record, with florals and stripes . . . often a combination of the two . . . outmoding the hard geometrics.

Cooking for the cold weather . . .

Some brand new cook books have just arrived at the Book Nook . . . late arrivals, as it happens, because they should have been here last fall . . . but well worth waiting for, we'd say . . . since they're full of tempting dishes especially suitable for cold weather! . . . "How to Make Good Curries", by Helen Lawson, is an excellent book with really economical recipes covering sauces, soups, chutneys and other things as well as curried meals . . . Only 3.95 . . . For down-to-earth economical cooking you'll enjoy owning "The Simmering Pot Cook Book' by Alice Denise Loebel . . . A very, very useful book to help a woman keep within her household budget . . . It includes dried beans and grains recipes . . . and gives kitchen ecology as well . . . More delights for the frugal housewife . . . a book called "Perfect Casseroles", by Audrey Hundy, who says casseroles are a cook's best friend . . . Great for entertaining . . . Comforting for a busy person to come home to on a cold night! . . . This hasn't exotic recipes but very good, wholesome casserole fare . . . $2.25 . . . "A Meal in a Minute" is the title of a cookbook by Annette Wolter . . . designed especially for the person in a hurry. Very clear recipes grouped in categories for delicious, nutritious meals in a short space of time . . . time of preparation given so you know exactly where you're at . . . $4.95 . . . And now for the piece de resistance . . . "A Treasury of Great Recipes" by Mary and Vincent Price . . . a re-issue of a very famous cook book which would make a magnificent wedding gift . . . or a gift for any person who loves to cook . . . It's a beautifully bound and illustrated book . . . de luxe in every sense of the word . . . Has delightful chitchat about the various countries from which the recipes come . . . Contains wine and spice indexes, etc. Magnifique! . . . $27.50 for this . . . Noticed that the Book Nook have been doing some "housecleaning" . . . resulting in two tables full of books . . . mostly one of a kind . . . marked down to half price or less . . . Some very good buys here, so go in and browse! . . . The Book Nook, 10 Centennial Square, 386-0813.

Beautiful capes at Welsh Hand Loom . . .

There are some people in this town . . . heaven help them! . . . who never bother to visit Nootka Court . . . think it's just for the tourists! . . . We feel sorry for them, because they're missing out on the Welsh Hand Loom . . . a truly delightful shop chock-full of attractive and distinctive clothes from Wales . . . not to mention all sorts of other things from this interesting part of Britain! . . . Take capes, for instance . . . Just recently we've heard a number of women complain that they couldn't find a decent cape in town . . . Well, the Welsh Hand Loom has a really good stock of capes in no less than five different styles . . . ranging from short to full length and in goodness knowns how many colors and patterns! . . . These are all in the famous 100% wool Welsh tapestry . . . and there are hats and skirts to match a good many of them . . . Something very new is a cape and tabard combined (tabard is a kind of vest) . . . These are very cozy . . . not to mention smart . . . Just in blue at the moment, but more are coming in soon . . . Also newly arrived are pure wool honeycomb quilts . . . double-bed size, with fringed sides . . . Completely reversible, these quilts can be used as either bedspreads or blankets . . . the honeycombing gives them thermal properties like a thermal blanket or underwear! . . . $65 for these . . . Tea cosies in the same honeycomb weave to keep your "cuppa" nice and hot . . . We might add that these honeycomb quilts are typically Welsh . . . come in pink, blue, yellow and purple with white . . . Noticed one lovely plaid one in blue, gold and white . . . We also saw some skirt and sweater packs . . . Skirt length in pure wool Welsh tapestry, and 1 lb of matching yarn for making a sweater . . . Only $27.50 for one of these at . . . Welsh Hand Loom, Nootka Court, 634 Humboldt St., 384-7723.

Fly to Europe by Wardair charter . . .

We must confess we had a moment of chagrin week before last when our column item for Paulin's said that government approval for charter flights to Britain had not yet been approved . . . and right alongside of it we read that approval had now been received . . . But that's the way it goes . . . things happen suddenly . . . and this column has to be completed several days before it appears in print! . . . Anyway, we're happy to say that Wardair charter flights are now fully approved by the government . . and if you'd like to jet off to Britain . . . or some other part of Europe . . . in the months ahead . . . you should make your reservations with Paulin's just as soon as possible . . . Some early birds have already been busy . . . and we understand that some flights are already fully booked . . . so don't delay if you're interested . . . Paulin's now have the complete list of Wardair flights, and they'll be glad to mail one to you . . . or better still, if you're anywhere in the vicinity, pick one up at their office . . . There's really a very good choice of dates, from mid-April through October . . . for stays of from two to six weeks in duration . . . All flights are from Vancouver . . . and terminate in London, Preswick, Amsterdam or Frankfurt, depending on your final destination . . . And what do you do once you get there . . . unless you're visiting friends or have some specific objective? . . . Well, Paulin's are now receiving supplies of brochures for most of the popular coach tours in Britain and Europe which, of course, they'll be glad to give you . . . and book you on those of your choice . . . They'll make your hotel reservations . . . arrange car hire . . . or other travel arrangements overseas if you prefer to do it on your own . . . Drop in to Paulin's and talk it over, won't you? . . . Paulin Travel, 1006 Government St., 382-9168.

Rich Or Famous

DEAR ABBY: Your reply to the 20-year-old man who said he liked older women interested me. You said he was probably looking for his mother, and you recommended counselling.

What about older men who prefer girls 20 or 30 years younger than themselves? Would you say that they are probably looking for their daughters, and recommend counseling for them, too? — NEW YORKER.

DEAR NEW YORKER: The 20-year-old man wrote to say he "grooved on women between 45 and 50 with gray hair and middle-age spread." Now if that doesn't sound like he's looking for Mamma, I miss my guess.

On the other hand, most older men who go wild over young chicks have insatiable egos and a horror of growing old. It may be only a coincidence, but when a young beautiful girl marries a man who's old enough to be her father, he's usually very rich — or famous.

DEAR ABBY: I'd like to meet that young kid who likes gray-haired women with a middle-age spread. (You said maybe he was looking for a mother.)

Well, I like young boys. Maybe I'm looking for a son. But what difference does it make as long as we both find what we're looking for? Sign me — "46 AND LIKES 'EM YOUNG."

DEAR ABBY: I am nearly 70 and widowed. Recently, my daughter visited me, and I mentioned that I had made provisions for my kidneys and eyes to be donated after my death, and I also told her that I had already made provisions to be cremated.

She said, "No way! I will not permit you to be cut up and cremated!"

Abby, this is MY wish. I have no use for a plot of ground for someone to keep up, or a headstone for someone to visit once a year. What right has my daughter, the oldest of my five children, to say that SHE won't permit it?

My plans are made and I've even paid $250 for my cremation, and I don't want those in charge to have to hassle my daughter after I'm gone. So what can I do? — MADE MY PLANS.

DEAR MADE: What you "can" do depends upon the state in which you live. There are state laws covering this situation. Talk to your lawyer. I'm with you, Mother. Your wishes should be carried out as soon as you are.

DEAR ABBY: Whenever my husband and I entertain company for dinner and I excuse myself to go into the kitchen to do some last minute things, invariably one of the female guests will get up and follow me into the kitchen saying she wants to "keep me company."

Abby, I haven't mastered adding spices to the entree, cooking vegetables, taking rolls out of the oven and keeping an intelligent conversation going all at the same time.

Last month we had two dinner parties, and both times my entree was ruined because I couldn't give my full attention to my dinner. I do not want company in the kitchen, but I don't want to hurt anyone's feelings. Can you help me? — Loner.

DEAR LONER: Use a little body language. When someone follows you into the kitchen, take her by the arm (gently, but firmly) and lead her back into the living room, telling her all the while how much you appreciate her offer of company but you prefer that she remain with the rest of the guests.

DEAR ABBY: I simply must write to say "thank you for being there." I'm a guy who reads you faithfully.

I find your column interesting and exciting, and your recipe for pecan pie was super. It made my Thanksgiving dinner!

It takes a woman like you to bring out the latent heterosexuality in me. Sock it to me, baby! — GAY IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Alvarez-Welch Medical Report

By DR. WALTER ALVAREZ

The statement, "Feed a cold and starve a fever," is familiar to probably all of us, but so far as I can learn, there it no scientific reason back of it.

Recently I read in the April 15, 1974 issue of Modern Medicine that Dr. William R. Beisel, a scientific adviser to the U.S. Army Medical Research Institute of Infectious Diseases says, "Stuff them both."

He says that when there is a fever, the person's body is inclined to consume larger amounts of food and then he may feel the need for all the nourishment that he can get because of the body's "inefficient nutrient use."

When one has a cold, Dr. Beisel recommends the eating of simple foods, especially broth, fruit juices, soft drinks and gelatin. One can take some aspirin.

The best medicine I have found to be miraculous in the treatment of colds is Copavin, which is partly codeine and partly papaverine. During the first 45 years of my life I used to have terrible colds four times a year, but since taking two Copavin capsules the minute I start sneezing or sniffing, I have never had a cold.

This medicine was discovered by that very able professor of medicine, Dr. Harold Diehl, when he spent a couple of years trying to find a cure for the colds that afflicted the thousands of students in the University of Minnesota. Unfortunately, hardly anyone got interested in using Copavin, probably because the average physician's great fear of the perfectly harmless codeine. In 69 years of practice I have never met anyone habituated to codine.

In an article in the Journal of the American Medical Association (October 14, 1974), Dr. Thomas H. Jukes says that man-made vitamins are just as good for us as are natural vitamins. Also, that there is no difference that scientists can show between the value of food grown in poor worn-out soil and that grown in rich soil. Also food grown with a chemical fertilizer is just as healthful as food grown with natural fertilizers. There are the ideas of experts.

Dr. Jukes says that the statement that chemicals added to our manufactured food take away much of its value for health is false. Wrong also is the statement that much of our food has been so processed and refined that it has lost its value for health. I know that I have been eating ordinary food and my children and my grandchildren have been eating such foods, and we are all strong and healthy.

The statement that chemical sprays that farmers use represent a danger to our health, even if they are used carefully, is untrue. Also not true, according to Dr. Jukes, is the statement that many foods lose a lot of their value for health because they are shipped so far and stored so long.

Interesting and sad to me is the remark, "Members of the general public who answered gave, on the average, 63 per cent 'false' " answers to the statements that Jukes lists. Also the people questioned got 86 per cent of their answers wrong. These people were presumably confirmed health food users or people who read the organic food literature. Even college graduates were wrong 55 per cent of the time. Hence, it is sad to see that the majority of our people have been so influenced by information that is not accepted as reliable by university professors or dietitians.

Dr. Jukes says that strong efforts are being made in Congress to have a law passed to favor the organic food idea. It would be a wonderful thing if we could educate our children in school so well that when they grow up they will turn to get exact information on science, not from untrained or poorly trained laymen, but to highly trained scientists.

When a reader asks me about whether or not homosexuality is inherited, I say that I just ran onto a paper published in 1951 by my old friend, the late Dr. Franz J. Kallmann of New York City, one of the world's greatest students of heredity.

Perhaps 40 years ago, as we sat at luncheon, he told me that in New York State he had a total of 5,108 sets of twins under observation. Some of these were one-egg, or "identical" twins, made from one ovum, while others were two-egg twins, made from two ova.

Naturally, the single-egg twins were the ones most likely to be remarkably alike physically and temperamentally. Hence if one alike twin was decidedly homosexual, the other twin was always homosexual, but if one "two-egg" twin was homosexual, the other twin was homosexual in only 57.7 per cent of the cases.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Forecast for Sunday, Jan. 26

By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent on property, authority and responsibility. You have right to ask questions — and obtain answers. One who is "insulted" by inquiries is not fair. Know it and give full play to reporter's instinct.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Slow down — doing too much at once — involving neighbors and relatives — could create problems. You might find what you seek close to home — acres of diamonds in your own back yard. Taurus, Scorpio and Libra are involved.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Financial pinch can hurt if you ignore storm warnings. Preserve gains. Reach agreement with one who controls budget, purse strings. If you co-operate — and avoid fooling yourself — you can turn adversity into definite advantage.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Cycle is high — you ride with temporary setback. Legal decision, if made, should prove to your advantage. One who sings blues is seeking a favor. Grant it only if all cards are on table — face up. You'll understand!

LEO (July 23 - Aug 22): Finish rather than begin — look behind the scenes and get lowdown on working methods. One who performs special service may complain about "bone ailment." Means complaints abound. Hold your ground. You are in the right and you'll prove it.

VIRGO (Aug 23 - Sept. 22): Friends may press you, amuse you, but they won't ignore you. Your creative juices ate stimulated. You feel more alive — you accept problems as challenges. Maintain independent stance. Highlight original approach. Leo, Aquarius could be in picture.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Accent is on business, civic duties, added responsibilities. Aquarian is in picture. Your sense of history and potential is activated. Means there are complications. Know it and realize that those on top are willing to make room for you. Are you ready?

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov 21): Affair of heart dominates. You face reality concerning love and life. Key now is to give full play to intellectual curiosity. Don't be satisfied with secondhand reports. Reach beyond what appears to be a restriction. Gemini, Sagittarius figure prominently.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Those who promise money may not be in position for immediate delivery. Know it and prepare accordingly. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio could be in picture. Strive to perceive subtle nuances. Study fine print.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Emphasis is on area of chart related to partnership, marriage, public image. Circumstances could dictate actions. Ride with tide. Some changes are necessary, even compromises. Older individual knows the law. Take it easy!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Someone is trying to correct an erroneous procedure. You will be dealing with practical issues, employment, health and unique services. You may be doing something "on the side" which may not be worth the price.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Your wishes, romantic notions are tested, squeezed. Another Pisces — and a Virgo — could figure prominently. You gain approval for many of your plans — but you also will have to provide an accounting for activities and money.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are an organizer, an individual with in-What you do, you do with a nate sense of showmanship, flourish. Capricorn, Cancer persons plan significant roles in your life. April should be an outstanding month this year. You will be working harder — but goal is in sight and your basic well-being is enhanced. Great advantage comes to you in October due to change of personnel or scenery.

Forecast for Monday, Jan. 27, 1975

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Full Moon position and aspects coincide now with creative urges, involvement, romance, a coming to terms with young person. Basic change in domestic area will prove beneficial. Win allies to your cause through diplomacy.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Be practical about emotional affairs. That may seem a contradiction in terms — but it will be necessary. One who can "wound" you where feelings are concerned is willing to call a truce. Meet situation halfway!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Full Moon stresses relatives, work, health and how to deal with one who talks a great game and breaks promises. Capricorn, Cancer could be involved. Maintain balance and dignity. Check past performances. Take nothing for granted.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Money and how to save, invest is accented. Finish what you start. Discuss situation with one familiar with law. Don't hang on to losing proposition. Aries, Libra could be in picture. Member of opposite sex tends to display extravagant tastes.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Cycle is high — take advantage of it by taking initiative. Another Leo could help show the way. Stress independence backed by solid structure. Means check signals. Be sure you are on same wavelength as older individual who pulls financial strings.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Forces tend to be scattered; you may be trying to do too much at once. travel, correspondence, ability to express yourself — these are highlighted. Gemini, Sagittarius persons could play significant roles.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Study Virgo message for valid hint. Friend helps you to fulfill desire. Romance is not to be ruled out. Relationship is on way to becoming "meaningful." You get nothing for nothing, however. Decide how much you are willing to sacrifice.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): What had been a logjam is released. You gain more prestige as past views are vindicated. Another Scorpio, Leo and Aquarius are likely to be in picture. You deal with professional superior. You get insight regarding profits, losses.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Change is necessary. What had been solid is now subject to "breakage." Know it and act accordingly. Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Means don't accept superficial answers. Be analytical. Long-distance communication contains surprise.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): What you do now requires approval of partner, mate. Otherwise, there will be roadblocks and odds for success will diminish. Share. Confide. Full Moon accents money of another, concern with hidden costs.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Spotlight is on agreement to take on additional duties. Your prestige could be on upswing — if your contract is valid. Accent is on legal nuances — and marriage. Pisces, Virgo individuals could figure prominently.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Practical matters dominate — if persistent you make money. Don't let up on responsibility, principles. Aim toward goal despite small-time skeptics. Capricorn, Cancer persons figure prominently. You get chance to illustrate concepts to one in authority.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have ability to see situation as a whole — you perceive potential in people and draw to you those who need help. This year features change, variety, travel for you. If single, you could marry. March and December will be your significant months. Aries, Libra persons play important roles in your life.

B.C. Lures Archeologists

By ELEANOR BOYLE
Times Staff

When Canada's provincial archeologists met together for the first time they came to B.C. because this province leads in the field of historical site preservation, according to Bjorn Simonsen.

Simonsen, provincial archeologist for B.C., met with his counterparts across the country for two days this week in Victoria.

Preservation of history is becoming more popular across the country, he said in an interview after the closed conference.

"The public demands it. People are interested in their own heritage."

When the Archeological and Historic Sites Protection Act was passed in 1960, B.C. became unique across the country with such protective legislation, he said.

The bill was amended in 1972.

"Most provinces now have legislation (regulating retrieval and use of historical materials found)," said Simonsen.

But all governments are still in the early stages of managing such materials, he said, and representatives discussed policy during the conference, held at the legislative buildings.

"We were talking about archeological resource management in all of the provinces," said Simonsen. Every province except Quebec and Prince Edward Island had a delegate, as did some federal government organizations such as the National Museum.

Attempting to set down a management model on paper, the scientists agreed on some requirments for "an ideal archeological program," he said.

Adequate funds must be available both for field work and follow-up as a basic requirement, he said.

"That's been a problem in B.C. There's been lots of excavation but few reports published."

Excavators have too often ignored the "real responsibility" they have to record information for their colleagues and the public, he said, adding that lack of money has partly been the problem.

Financial restrictions have eased at least on paper for Simonsen's office during its three-year life. Starting with an operating budget of $15,000 in 1971, the office was given $110,000 this year along with $200,000 for summer student programs and $150,000 from B.C. Hydro and the department of highways, he said.

Supplying the provincial archeologist's office with construction proposals years in advance, the company and the department pay for investigation of construction areas for sites o fhistorical significance.

Roads around the province have been detoured and building delayed in the last few years after the finding of artifacts on rights-of-way, said Simonsen.

To what point should projects, often multi-million dollar ones, be delayed or halted altogether merely for the sake of history?

"That's something we discussed a lot," he said. "It depends how important the site is.

"The answer has to be based on what that site can yeild as far as information."

The catch to that theory, however, is that no one can tell how important a site is until tests excavations are conducted, often holding up a project meanwhile, he said.

Though the conference was the first of provincial representatives, members of the Canadian Archelogical Association meet yearly to talk about matters that are largely academic.

Provincial archeologists will meet for the second time after the Association's next gathering in March, 1975, said Simonsen.

He hopes this week's conference will become an annual event.

PSYCHOLOGIST HERE

Internationally - noted - psychologist Robert Ornstein will give two public lectures at the University of Victoria next Thursday and Friday, Jan. 30 and 31.

Ornstein is currently working out of the Langley-Porter Neuropsychology Institute in San Fransisco and has authored books which include The Psychology of Time and The Psychology of Consciousness.

UVic psychology professor David Walker calls Ornstein "at least as important as R. D. Laing."

Laing, an acclaimed sociologist, spoke to Victoria audiences last year.

One of Ornstein's major theories is that "how you feel is as valid as how you think, said Walker.

Ornstein says the left side of a Westerner's brain is involved in linear and logical thinking while the right side handles intuitive thoughts.

He contends both ways of thought are equally valid because an entire side of the brain is devoted to each.

"That gives you and me and Joe Blow just one more bit of freedom," said Walker.

The theory implies that feelings about a subject are as valid as logical deductions, said the UVic professor.

"It says the (opinion of the) expert is not necessarily true. And it extends to the political sphere. The reason we're not in a democracy is the average guy thinks he has nothing to say. But we must have free people willing to vote how they feel, not how someone (an expert) tells them to vote," said Walker.

Ornstein's two lectures will be entitled Two Modes of Consciousness and The Psychology of Consciousness.

Thursday's lecture is scheduled for 8 p.m. in UVic's Elliott 168. Friday's lecture will be at 12:30 p.m. in Cornett 265.

Sponsoring the talks are the University Lectures Series Committee and the overseas organization The Institute for Cultural Research.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A young Victoria man, sentenced last December to nine months in jail for possession of heroin, appeared before Judge William Ostler in provincial court Friday and asked for immediate sentences on two other matters before the court.

Douglas Robert Andrews had earlier pleaded not guilty to wilful damage and intimidation laid following an incident at a Victoria residence last March 28.

A trail had been set for March 5, but Andrews said he wanted to plead guilty to the charges now so he could dispose of the matter and clear the way for him to enter a work-release program.

Prosecutor Peter Birkett said a Victoria man had charged Andrews with mischief and the accused went to the man's house to try to get him to drop the charge. "I will kill you if you don't," he is reported to have said. Defence said Andrews was drunk at the time.

Since then the accused and plaintiff have patched up their differences, defence counsel pointed out.

The crown was asked whether it would dismiss the case; and Birkett said no.

"I agree with the prosecutor," Ostler said. "The accused, even though he may have been drunk, did what I consider extremely serious ... the attempt by anyone to intimidate another in order to thwart justice."

He fined Andrews $200 but gave him nine months to pay.

* * *

"I don't know how you can live in harmony with your surroundings when you have stolen paintings looking down at you," Ostler said to 46-year-old James Scott Scullion.

Scullion, 1270 Balmoral, pleaded guilty to two counts of theft under $200.

The crown alleged Scullion stole a photographic reproduction of a painting from the apartment of Ian McDonald, 1720 Richmond Road on Sept. 19. The reproduction was valued at $80.

On Jan. 1, Scullion visited the same friend and removed a $40 reproduction from the wall.

Police searched Scullion's home on Thursday. The $80 painting was found hanging on the wall; the $40 painting was located under the bed.

Ostler set a fine of $500.

Janis Anne Parsons, 26, of 3005 Tillicum Road, was fined $200 after pleading guilty to shoplifting a $4.50 keycase from Simpsons-Sears Ltd. Thursday.

Gordon Daniel Mazzei, 20 of 504 Selkirk was fined $100 and placed on four months probation for theft under $200.

Police said Mazzei pumped $10.05 worth of gas from a service station at 2670 Douglas, Dec. 27 and drove off without paying. He pleaded guilty.

A 25-year-old woman was sentenced to six months in jail and given two years probation for fraud, false pretence, uttering and failing to appear incourt.

Sandra Lorraine Callioux, address not known, pleaded guilty to the charges stemming from her receiving $1,261 from the human resources department to which she was not entitled.

Birkett noted Callioux has been in custody for the past six weeks, during which time "she has shown a high degree of honesty."

In arriving at the sentence, Ostler said, "I have considered a lengthy sentence but I have also considered her time in custody."

He said Callioux "has developed a penitent attitude ... and rather than giving her a lengthy sentence I have decided to give her a shorter sentence and a lengthy probation period.

A 19-year-old man was fined $500 by Judge W. L. Ostler in Victoria Provincial Court Friday after pleading guilty to a charge of impaired driving and escape from lawful custody.

Escorted to the city police station after being placed under arrest for impaired driving early Friday, Lawrence Albert Carlow, 619 Dunedin, ran from the police, down the hallway of the station, toward the police parking compound. Carlow did not make it to the parking lot; he was apprehended in the hall.

Frank Ernest Lane, 55, of R.R. No. 1 East Sooke pleaded guilty to impaired driving and refusing to undergo a breath test.

The crown alleged Lane had two previous convictions for impaired driving.

He was sentenced to four months in jail and prohibited to drive for 18 months.

Twenty-two-year-old Jeffrey Mair, no fixed address, sentenced last Dec. 6 to two years less a day for breaking and entering was back in court Friday, this time pleading guilty to carrying a firearm without a permit, driving without insurance, driving without licence plates and misusing licence plates.

Mair was charged Dec. 5 after making an illegal turn at Hillside and Fifth.

Ostler sentenced him to one month, the term to run at the same time as his current sentence.

A Winchester shotgun which police found on the back seat of his car was confiscated to the crown.

Douglas Stanley Halstead, 22, was ordered to stand trial in higher court following a preliminary hearing before Ostler.

Halstead is charged with extortion, abduction, and car theft. The charges stem from an incident Nov. 12 when a Victoria car salesman was forced to accompany a man on a ferry trip to Tsawwassen.

Larry Michael Flatman, 24, of 1224 Oxford was given a suspended sentence and placed on six months probation after he was found guilty of possessing a small amount of cocaine Sept. 30 in Bastion Square.

Symphony in Schools

Secondary schools in the area continue to enjoy in-school concerts by Victoria Symphony Orchestra in the second half of the current season.

This week the orchestra gave concerts in Shoreline and High Rock secondary schools and on Feb. 6 it will be playing at Cedar Hill and Lansdowne.

These concerts have been made possible by a grant from the Music Performance Trust Funds administered through the musicians' union and made available with the co-operation of Victoria Musicians' Association, Local 247.

On Feb. 13 Laszlo Gati and the orchestra will give a concert at St. Peter's Church in Nanaimo, made possible by an assisting grant from the Vancouver Foundation.

IBM Wins Suit Reversal

WASHINGTON (WP) A $259.5 million damages award against International Business Machines Corp. the largest civil judgment ever entered in U.S. court was set aside Friday by the Tenth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver.

The appeals court ruled that Telex Corp., the small competitor that had won the massive award in an Oklahoma federal court, must pay IBM $18.5 million on IBM's counterclaim that Telex had stolen the computer giant's trade secrets.

Telex, a Tulsa-based supplier in the computer industry, had prevailed in the lower court on its charges that IBM tried to lock it out of a significant portion of the computer business the furnishing of electronic equipment compatible with IBM's machines.

U.S. District Judge A. Sherman Christensen found that IBM held a dominant market position and had abused that position with "sophisticated" rather than "nakedly aggressive" techniques to the detriment of Telex.

The circuit court, saying a fuller explanation would follow in a written opinion, announced in a brief unsigned order that Judge Christensen was being reversed because Telex had failed to prove the use of predatory tactics in a relevant economic market.

What am I?
I cannot be seen. Many times I go completely unrecognized—particularly in the very young. Because of me, children fail to learn and their speech will never be normal. They are labeled stubborn. Deficient. Or even retarded. Yet they are none of these.
I make the elderly suffer. When I strike, they often cut themselves off from family and friends. They feel misunderstood. And they know the heartbreak of loneliness.
In all, I rob more than 1.5 million Canadians of much that is good in life. I undermine their confidence and eat away at their social life.
I am equally hard on the rich and poor. I cause trouble on the job and in the home. Yet, in spite of this, few of those I attack do anything to fight me, because no one wants to admit I exist.
I am a hearing problem.
Early detection is important. Call for a Free Electronic Hearing Test now.

PERSPECTIVES AND PREJUDICES

Fire and Brimstone Don't Come Easy to a Preacher

By REV. J. A. DAVIDSON

A few months ago a bright young minister told me that he thinks that the sermon will soon be obsolete and that other methods of communicating the Christian message within the Church are being developed.

I agree that we need to develop new methods of communication within the Church — but will they eliminate the need for conventional preaching?

An official of the United Church of Canada who works in the field of minister placement tells me that almost every congregation seeking a new minister looks, first of all, for a strong preacher.

Perhaps the ministers who are putting down the sermon, despite their postures of withitness and relevance, are quite out of touch with the expectations of the average church member.

Perhaps it is not that preaching has failed but that some preachers have failed in their preaching.

We preachers, of course, deserve much of the criticism that is thrown at us. We often come to our pulpits inadequately prepared.

Some of us think that we are wasting valuable time if we spend more than a couple of hours a week slapping together a sermon or thawing another preacher's deep-freeze sermon (many are available in books and journals) and adding a little of one's own homiletic sauce.

We sometimes succumb to the temptation to serve dainty little sugar-cookie sermons because we think that our people will find them more palatable than the rough bread of the Gospel.

Much of our pulpit prose and presentation is so stuffy, so lacking in sparkle and thrust, that it can cause a graven image to yawn.

I have the discomforting suspicion that most ministers today are simply too busy or think they are too busy to prepare adequate sermons.

Some preachers, those of exceptional talent and fluency, may not need long hours of preparation, but we ordinary journeymen preachers give our people mighty thin gruel if we do not spend long hours preparing to preach.

But it isn't all the preacher's fault. You pew-sitters must take some of the blame.

If you keep him busy, busy, busy, on administrative and pastoral and community tasks you shouldn't be surprised or indignant when his sermonic pump sucks mud.

And don't demand that he water down the Gospel and add extra sweetness.

A faithful preacher will sometimes have to jar the self-esteeming sensitivities of his people, jostle their prejudices, prod their sluggish consciences.

I am reminded of a magazine cartoon which shows a minister shaking hands with a woman at a church door and saying to her, "Well, frankly, if you liked the sermon it didn't achieve its purpose."

The history of the Church demonstrates that strength and vitalidy in the Church is always tied to strength and vitality in the Church's pulpits.

Competent, creative preaching is always a cause and a concommitant of renewal in the Church.

The Roman Catholic Church is showing awareness of this in its current efforts to rehabilitate the sermon as an essential in worship.

When the sermon has become obsolete, the Church is already in the stage of obsolescence.

Camosun Course Ready

In a first-ever course for f Camosun College, a five-session program examining Christianity will start Feb. 19.

Entitled Christian Studies, it is a pilot program which could expand in future if response if sufficient, said community education director H. Alan Batey this week.

Teaching the course will be Associate Professor Dr. Clark Pinnock of Vancouver's Regent theological college.

Pinnock will commute from the mainland on a weekly basis for the Wednesday evening sessions to go from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m.

Lectures will deal with the concept of faith from an academic standpoint rather than an evangelical one, said Batey.

Pinnock's subject will be Reasons for Faith, and he said, "we will examine some of the arguments with which the Christian message has been supported intellectually."

He said questions to be faced in lectures include: does faith need reasons? and, does faith have experimental, historical, philosophical or experiential bases?

"The course will be of value to any who are concerned about the intellectual foundations of faith," said Pinnock.

Students will be introduced to important books and thinkers who have dealt with the philosophical problems of Christianity throughout history.

Persons interested in registering for the course should contact the college.

A limited number will be accepted.

Sentenced to Work

A 27-year-old man has been directed to perform 40 hours of community work as part penalty following his conviction for possession of stolen property.

Judge Harold Alder made the order in Victoria provincial court Thursday in suspending sentence and placing Wayne Beaumont, 4077 Carey, on six months probation.

It is the first time an order of this kind has been made by a Victoria provincial court judge and may set a trend for future sentencing.

Alder ordered Beaumont to complete the work as directed by probation officer Edward Stanton.

Stanton said Beaumont, who works a regular day shift as a painter, will put in 2½ hours for four days a week running the front counter at the Victoria Boy's Club.

Beaumont pleaded guilty Jan. 10 to possession of two folding lawn chairs worth $10 each that had been reported stolen from an Oak Bay residence last fall.

Discussion Series Set

A series of eight discussions on church membership begins this week at Victoria's First United.

It's for anyone interested in discussing the Christian faith," said Rev. Lawrence Moon of the church.

Leading the discussions will be Rev. Hugh Hunter.

The series aims at preparation for Confirmation on March 16, but is also open to those not wishing to be confirmed.

Time of the first discussion Jan. 26 will be 5:30 p.m., and subsequent sessions will go at 6:30 p.m., said Moon.

NEW RECTOR ARRIVES MARCH 1

Rev. Barry Jenks will begin duties as rector of St. George the Martyr on March 1, moving down-Island from his current post at St. James in Nanaimo.

Rectorship duties at St. George's will be handled by Rev. Marlowe Anderson and Bishop Pierce from next week until March 1.

Rev .Charles Bishop retires from the church this weekend.

DIAL A-THOUGHT 592-4332

Joy Key to Youth Church

When parishioners chant responses at the Children's Church of the Golden Key, happiness is the emphasis.

"There's nothing to fear. God is love," said church minister Dr. Emma Smiley. "We want to teach children the love of God and not the fear of God."

"The only way we'll change the world is by children, and not from bad to good but sad to happy."

The concept of joy as an end in itself marks this faith different from those whose dogma compels people to negate their wants.

One cannot be a positive influence on the world without happiness and self-love, say followers fo the International New Thought Alliance, the movement backing the children's church.

Located on Victoria's Pentrelew Pl., it is a subsidiary group of the Victoria Truth Centre.

"Children go to school five days a week. Why go to Sunday school? Their parents go to church. Why shouldn't they?" said Smiley.

"We find that our children love their own church."

Parishioners right from the age of three attend a Sunday morning service before breaking up into groups for study of the Principles which include "God is greater than any seeming problem" and "I live wisely by thinking only of what I desire in my life."

In classes held within the church building, parishioners often illustrate the principles with art techniques.

No one is reprimanded in either services or classes. "The greatest discipline is love," said Smiley. "You reward the good and forget the bad."

"If older ones kick their foot a little (in church) we don't grab them by the shoulders and say, 'stop that.' "

So why do it to children? she asked.

One matter insisted on in the church is silence. A large electric sign proclaims the word Silence, lit up as people file in for a service.

"It's only when there's stillness that we can fully realize God," said the minister.

The well-kept prayer garden outside is also dedicated to silence.

Even unspoken knowledge the children are taught has a positive emphasis, and bulletin boards are not an exception.

Planted in the church's main room, one such board contains only good news, for Smiley's simple reason that "if everyone ignored the bad news it would die of neglect."

And framed on a side wall is a quote from Through the Looking Glass, a Lewis Carroll book:

"One can't believe impossible things," said Alice, to which the Queen replied: "When I was your age I always did it for half an hour a day. Why, sometimes I've believed as many as six impossible things before breakfast."

UNITED CHURCH MARKS FIFTY YEARS

Celebration of the United Church of Canada's 50th year begins on southern Vancouver Island Jan. 26 when a mass rally will bring parishes together.

Choirs from all of Victoria's united churches will sing as one, and the Reynolds high school band will provide music.

The controversial Dr. R. B. McClure who held the post as first-ever lay moderator of the Church in the late 1960s is the scheduled speaker.

Born in Portland and educated in China and Canada, McClure served as a missionary-surgeon in northern China, Taiwan, the Gaza Strip, India, Burma, Malaysia and elsewhere between 1923 and 1967.

"He lived on his old-age pension when he was moderator, and refused to take a salary," said Rev. David Stiven of Gordon United. "He's a most colorful figure."

The rally will be a typical church service with hymns and prayers. said Rev. John Travis of Centennial United.

What does it mean to be a disciple of Jesus Christ?

What does it cost?

Young people attempting to answer those questions should consider attending a Feb. 1 all-day retreat at Emmanuel Baptist Church.

"In our busy schedules, we rarely get the time to get deeply into what the Word of God teaches, so set this seven-hour block aside now," said church youth minister Norman Barton.

"It is to give some teaching interaction on what it means to be a disciple, and to give young adults a chance to get together for a period of time."

Quest is the name of the retreat, open to persons 18 to 30 who are working, studying or both, he said.

The invitation is extended to persons of any or no denomination.

Terry Sheppard is the special guest speaker for the event. After a boyhood in California, military service in southeast Asia, then jobs which included management of rock bands, Sheppard turned to the teaching sof the Lord.

He began the House of Christian Love, designed to help youth in mental, spiritual and physical ways.

Sheppard was born in Canada and has now returned to this country where he speaks regularly on campuses. He will lead Saturday's retreat on discipleship.

Interested persons should register before Jan. 28 by sending their names and $3 each to the church. A limit of 100 retreatnats will be accepted.

SILHOUETTED by St. George the Martyr Anglican Church in Cadboro Bay are Rev. Charles and Mrs. Bishop, now retiring from church duties. The minister has been rector of St. George's since 1968, and Mrs. Bishop instrumental in Sunday school development. Friends and parishioners are invited to a retirement party Jan. 27 at 7:30 p.m. in the church hall.

MISSIONARY TO SPEAK

Canada's first missionary in Nepal will speak to the annual meeting of the Victoria Presbyterial United Church Women Jan. 29.

A medical missionary on leave from Nepal, Helen Huston is an Alberta minister's daughter serving in a 25-bed hospital at Amp Pipal near the capital of Kathmandu.

SPENDING SURVEY TO PROBE CHANGES

OTTAWA (CP) — Surveyers from Statistics Canada will be knocking on doors of nearly 14,000 households between next week and mid-March to find out how families spent their money in 1974.

The survey of family spending patterns is done about every two years and when there is a significant shift in these patterns the survey is used as the basis for adjusting weights of components of the consumer price index.

Weights of the index components now are based on a 1967 survey of spending patterns.

The 1967 survey found, for example, that the average family spent about one-quarter of its income on food and slightly more than 30 per cent on housing.

Missionary-MD At United Rally

World-famous Canadian medical missionary Dr. R. B. McClure, in Victoria to speak at a United Church rally Sunday night, will preach at Cadboro Bay United Church at 10 a.m. Sunday.

McClure was the first lay moderator of the United Church of Canada.

U.K. Soldier Hit

BELFAST (UPI) — A landmine injured a patrolling British soldier today on the border of the Irish Republic and fears were expressed that a move to establish a new cease-fire may be jeopardized by treatment of Irish Republican Army prisoners in the republic.

450-Year Turmoil Marked

Horse and buggy still Mennonite primary mode of transportation

By LESLIE K. TARR

Canada's 175,000 Mennonites this week observe the 450th anniversary of the birth of their movement.

Since that day — Jan. 21, 1525 — their story has frequently been one of intense persecution and enforced wanderings.

Mennonites trace their origin to the Anabaptist movement of the 16th century. The Anabaptists have been described as the "third force" of the Reformation period. The two major protagonists in that mighty religious upheaval — the Roman Catholics and Protestants — shared a hatred for the Anabaptists, regarding them as religious and social radicals.

The radicals contended that the Reformers had not gone far enough in their reaction against the Catholic church. They called for a thorough restoration of the church and faith which they saw in the New Testament.

Specifically they insisted on a voluntary church membership composed of those who had personally professed their faith in Christ and who were baptized after that decision to follow Him as Lord of their lives.

That sounds innocent enough to 20th-century ears, but, in the 16th century, it struck at the very root of the church-state arrangement.

The name Anabaptist, indicated they had been baptized again — a reference to their contention that their followers must be baptized following belief, even though they had been baptized as infants.

The great Swiss reformer Ulrich Zwingli tried to argue the young Anabaptists out of their position. Then, in January, 1525, the Senate of Zurich ruled that any parents who delayed the baptism of their infants more than eight days should be exiled.

The young men who led the movement met on the evening of Jan. 21 and, after deliberation and prayer, took a decisive and defiant step. One of them, George Blaurock, a former priest, asked the 27-year-old leader, Conrad Grebel, to baptize him. Grebel consented, and then Blaurock, in turn, baptized Grebel and the others. The Anabaptist or Mennonite movement was born.

Anabaptist evangelism flourished and converts were baptized, received into local church fellowships and instructed to follow a simple life-style and be flesh-and-blood followers of Christ. They were to be obedient citizens, harm no one and coerce no one in religion.

Their reward was to have the fury of Europe descend upon them. The Diet of Spires in 1529 enunciated the policy of the Empire toward the Anabaptists:

"Every Anabaptist and unbaptized person of either sex should be put to death."

Some states of Europe actually organized a special police unit — "the Anabaptist hunters."

Few Anabaptist leaders were permitted to die natural deaths. One who did was Menno Simons, a former priest, who led the group in the Netherlands. In tribute to his leadership, the movement came to be known as the Mennonites.

To this day, the Mennonites hold to the basic tenets of the 16th-century Anabaptists — an emphasis on Christianity as discipleship involving a radical life-style.

The first Mennonites settled in Ontario in 1786 following the American Revolution. They came in their Conestoga wagons from Pennsylvania and settled in the Niagara, Kitchener, and Markham areas. Today their rural churches, with an adjacent graveyard, are a part of the scenery. In addition, their influence is evident in urban Kitchener, St. Catharines, and Waterloo.

SUPER COW!

OTTAWA (CP) — It sounded like bull to some opposition members when Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan boasted in the Commons Friday that Canadian cows are "the super cows of the world."

"Super bull," snapped Gordon Fairweather (PC — Fundy Royal).

"It is a matter of fact and the whole world knows it and I cannot understand why honorable members opposite do not, that we do have super bulls," said Whelan.

"We've got one," said the unimpressed Fairweather.

Whelan said his department's breeding program "has made the Canadian cow, especially the Canadian-Holstein cow, the super cow of the world."

No School Cuts—Dailly

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

B.C. school boards have been told they will not have to cut back on staffing or educational programs this year despite rapidly inflating costs.

Education Minister Eileen Dailly said today boards should try to maintain existing programs in 1975 and the provincial government will "make every effort" to ensure that no district suffers from dramatic increases in mill rates.

In a speech to the northern branch of the B.C. Schools Trustees Association, Dailly said "the government and the boards collectively are going to be very hard pressed to continue to meet the kind of educational programs that have been developing over the last two years."

Local mill rates must increase to meet inflationary increases in school costs, she said, but the government "is committed to finding every possible dollar that it can to assist the boards to meet their budget needs in 1975."

Dailly said there would be some kind of averaging formula applied to school mill rate increases experienced across the province to ensure that no one district suffers high increases in mill rates.

If all districts maintain their existing programs, their existing student-teacher ratios and budget only for additional programs that are "absolutely necessary", the province will provide supplementary grants to ensure that no district is forced to raise its mill

Optimistic Stock Jump In U.K.

LONDON (FP) — The stock exchange took a phenomenal jump in share prices Friday sparked by new confidence that the ruling Labor government can beat inflation.

An amazing $4 billion was added to share values as heavy buying by institutional investors sent the Financial Times index up by 19.9 points in one day to 217.

This means that the stock market has gone from a rock-bottom 146 points on Jan. 6 to 217 in 14 days. The last time the index moved from 146 to over 200 was in 1954—and it took 15 months.

There were several factors causing the surge in confidence, including:

—Two bank rate cuts by the Bank of England;

—Delayed but positive business reaction to tough speeches by the prime minister and the chancellor of the exchequer warning the country to pull its belt in;

—Government axing of the multi-billion-dollar channel tunnel project with a resulting easing of strain on future capital markets;

—Firm public advice to unions not to base pay claims on expected price increases, delivered by Len Murray, general secretary of the powerful Trade Union Congress;

—Ending of uncertainty over the Common Market issue by the prime minister's announcement of a referendum before the end of June;

—Growing hope that Ulster terrorism may be approaching its end.

Markets also rallied in North America.

Gold shares recorded some of their sharpest gains in more than two weeks on the Toronto Stock Exchange, while in New York the market reached its highest closing level since early November, with a broad rally stimulated by more cuts in the U.S. bank prime lending rate.

In Toronto, the gold index jumped 22.99 to 383.15, responding to a rebound in the bullion price on overseas markets.

The TSE industrials index gained 2.11 to 175.80, highest since Aug. 21 last.

On the New York Stock Exchange, the Dow Jones industrial average rose 9.85 to 666.61, extending its gain for the week to 21.98 points.

Extortion Gangs Busy in Vancouver

VANCOUVER (CP) — Extortion gangs of Chinese teenagers are intimidating high school students and in some instances have barged into schools to rough up non-paying victims, according to the Vancouver Sun.

The gangs have picked almost entirely on Chinese youths who police say are afraid to inform authorities about the incidents.

Two separate gangs with seven or eight members in each are known to police. They apparently got their tactics and some of their members from young Chinese extortion gangs operating in San Francisco and Seattle.

On Friday four young men were charged with kidnapping and robbery after a Vancouver youth was taken "for a ride" through Stanley Park to extort $200 from him.

Police said Tsun Wong was forced into a car Tuesday and intimidated into withdrawing $200 from his bank.

Man Kam, Ha Cham Tom, Kai Sun Szeto and Larry Mo Yip have been charged.

In an interview with the Sun, Inspector John Page said information about the gangs is sparse and is based on rumor or on conversations with a few victims who have agreed to speak out.

"But for the most part the victims are afraid of retaliation," said Insp. Page.

He said the ideal victims, called "visa boys" by the gangs, are newly arrived immigrants ignorant of immigration laws.

The gangs set up a victim on a sidewalk and bump into him. The "visa boy" is told he has insulted the gang's honor and must pay for it.

Sometimes the victim is ordered to pay $20 or more to the gang, said Insp. Page. Other times he is told to buy the gang a dinner or get beaten up.

He said no one has been seriously hurt, but several young people have been assaulted — at least one in the cafeteria of an east end high school.

Miners Seek Lunch-Hour Sex Break

SUVA, Fiji (Reuter) — Gold miners are seeking a 30-minute mid-day sex break.

The miners say this is the best time for sex, their union secretary, Navita Raqona, said Friday.

The demand is one of the number of issues the 1,600-strong union is discussing with a mining company.

Raqona said a man has a sexual obligation to his wife, and if he goes home exhausted at 5 p.m., he cannot fulfil his duty.

The union wants the sex break added to the normal lunch break.

The union proposes to limit the sex break to married men.

"Alternative arrangements" would have to be made to compensate bachelors, said Raqona.

U.S. Planning Firm Oil Stand With Canada

WASHINGTON — The U.S. plans to engage in "strong bargaining" with Canada on a broad range of energy issues, according to Washington Senator Warren Magnuson.

Magnuson said Friday he received this promise from two senior U.S. government officials after he complained that the U.S. was dealing with Canada on an ad hoc basis.

The two officials were Thomas Enders, assistant secretary of state for economic and business affairs, and Mel Conant, assistant administrator for international affairs at the federal energy administration.

Magnuson said he summoned the two to his Senate office to explan reports that Puget Sound refineries would be the first cut off from Canadian crude oil as Canada reduces its exports.

Magnuson feared that such a cutoff would mean an increase in tanker shipments to replace the Canadian oil. At present, Washington state gets 176,000 barrels of Canadian oil each day, although its refinery capacity was 330,000 barrels a day, he said.

"I was concerned that the federal officials did not understand the environmental consequences of such a decision," Magnuson said.

However, the two federal officials assured him that no decision has been made on allocating dwindling supplies of Canadaian oil across the U.S.

Both Magnuson and Sen. Henry Jackson are also concerned that the Midwestern states would get preferential treatment in allocations.

"The federal officials assured me that the environmental interests of the Northwest would be carefully weighted," Magnuson said after his meeting.

One suggestion, he said, was the Midwest could be supplied by oil moved up from the Gulf of Mexico.

At present, allocation of export supplies to various U.S. regions is handled by Canada. But there have been two meetings, with a third planned, on turning over the allocation process to the U.S. because of the red tape involved. It is understood that Canada would be quite happy to do this.

However, the U.S. has not decided what to do.

BAND STRUCK A CZAR NOTE

PORTO ALEGRE (Reuter) — The military guard of honor in southern Brazil has hit the wron note again, this time playing the Czarist national anthem in honor of the Soviet ambassador.

Four months ago a band played the West German national anthem in honor of the East German ambassador.

A member of the Soviet ambassador's entourage interrupted the baton-swinging major to tell him that the Czar was overthrown 57 years ago.

NEWS BRIEFS

Olympic Talks

MONTREAL (CP)—The Star says Lord Killanin and the executive of the International Olympic Committee (IOC) have asked Montreal officials of the 1976 Summer Games to appear at an emergency meeting in Amsterdam on Monday "with answers" to questions about construction schedules.

CNR Suing

TORONTO (CP) — Canadian National Railways (CNR) freight and passenger service from Ontario to British Columbia, remained severely curtailed today as CNR began serving writs for damages on 2,000 locomotive engineers who it says are striking illegally.

11 Die at Sea

PENZANCE, England (AP) — Eleven crew members died today when the British freighter Lovat sank in a howling gale 15 miles off the rocky southwest tip of England, police said. The Royal Air Force rescue centre said there were only two survivors.

Gaza Violence

TEL AVIV (AP)— Israeli soldiers sho tand wounded an Arab boy and girl in the occupied Gaza Strip today following a grenade attack that missed the troops but set their jeep ablaze, the Israeli military command said. It was the worst incident in Gaza in nearly two years.

Gas Service Cut

MONTREAL (CP) — About 200 gas repairmen from Toronto and Ottawa were flown here early today in an attempt to restore gas service to 15,000 customers following a refusal by local repair crews to work overtime. A Gaz Metropolitan Inc. spokesman said a main valve regulating the gas flow to several west-end districts was deliberately turned off.

Paralyzed Youth Wins $1.5M Suit

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Gary Thornton, 19, of Prince George, whose neck was broken in a school gymnasium accident in 1971, was awarded $1.5 million damages Friday.

Lawyers said the award was the highest personal damage award ever made in the Commonwealth.

Prince George School District, which must pay the sum, carries only $1 million liability insurance.

Mac Carpenter, board secretary-treasurer, said he did not know how the board would find the $534,058 balance of the award.

The settlement was also against David Edamura, who was the teacher in charge of the class at the time of the accident.

In a written judgment, Mr. Justice Douglas Andrews of the B.C. supreme court assessed the damages against the school district and Edamura. The judge dismissed the action against John Harrower, the school's principal.

Don Andrews, one of the counsel arguing for the complainant, said the damages were claimed on the basis of $4,200 expenses a month for a 50-year life expectancy.

Mr. Justice Andrews said the youth was entitled to substantial damages because of his total disability and complete reliance on others for physical needs.

Gary Thornton is now a patient at Grandview Auxiliary Hospital in Edmonton — a rehabilitation centre. As a result of the accident in Prince George he is paralyzed in all four limbs.

In his decision Friday, Mr. Justice Andrews explained the youth was injured while attempting to somersault from a springboard to a layer of foam chunks. He said the teacher should not have permitted the students to use a box horse for that purpose.

BITTER VOTE FORECAST

The next provincial election will be the most bitter political fight the province has ever seen says Premier David Barrett in a wide-ranging interview with Times editor George Oake on page four today. Conversation focused on the personal rather than the political and Barrett talks about his philosophy, faults and the lack of reason in North American politics.

No Scrutiny for CIDA: PM

By RON CLINGEN
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Prime Minister Trudeau says he has no intention of placing the Canadian International Development Agency in a position where it's spending would be subjected to regular scrutiny in the Commons.

A suggestion by Conservative external affairs critic Claude Wagner that the government agency be given departmental status brought a terse "no" from the PM in the Commons Friday.

The Ottawa Journal, in a series of copyrighted articles which began Thursday, claimed the Canadian aid agency is scrambling to spend $117 million left in its budget before the fiscal year ends in three months.

Wanger had insisted many of the "numerous allegations" concerning the operation, policies and direction of CIDA "demand immediate answers."

The MP for the Quebec riding of Ste. Hyacinthe claimed "we have only seen the tip" of allegations against CIDA.

B.C. Residents Hurt by Boat Tax—MP

Times News Services

OTTAWA — A government bill to authorize higher taxes on motorboats and privatte aircraft came under attack from all sides of the Commons Friday.

Progressive Conservatives and New Democrats, joined by Liberal Hugh Anderson (Comox-Alberni), called the taxes discriminatory measures likely to increase unemployment and hamper transportation, especially in the North.

Anderson said the proposed tax, provided for in Turner's Nov. 18 budget, is detrimental to residents of B.C. who have to rely on small boats and aircraft for transportation to and from their communities.

He also charged that the tax would be detrimental to the boat-building industry on the West Coast and in other parts of Canada.

Anderson said that on the northern part of Vancouver Island, small boats and aircraft are often the only means of transportation available in an area already suffering from high costs due to its inaccessibility.

He said he knows that the provincial government in Victoria is not interested in the question of transportation on northern Vancouver Island, and that he is sure Turner doesn't share this attitude of the Barrett government.

The MP read a number of letters from his constituents protesting against the proposed 10 per cent additional tax on pleasure craft over 20 horse power.

He said the measure will discourage marine sales by increasing price to the consumer by 20 per cent over last year's prices, and that this will lead to unemployment in the local industry at both the manufacturers' and retail level.

Some of the letters charged that the tax is discriminatory in that it will effect mainly residents of communities on the east and west coasts of Canada.

Anderson also pointed out that many boats and planes had been ordered before Nov. 18 when the tax would become effective. He asked the finance minister to ensure, if he goes ahead with the tax, that it won't apply to boats and planes ordered before the effective date, but not delivered until later.

"It is an injustice to have ordered under one set of figures and have an item delivered under another," he said.

The Vancouver Island MP pointed out that most of the aircraft used in northern B.C. and the Island are single engine aircraft or other small planes falling under the special tax category.

"They play an important part in the economy of our

French Goal: Kilowatt Car

PARIS (CP) — The rising cost of gasoline, currently retailing at about $1.80 a gallon, is causing France to intensify research into electric vehicles.

Several electric buses, capable of transporting about 40 passengers at a top speed of 35 miles an hour, are already plying the Paris streets on a trial basis.

Cities such as Lyon and Dijon are also experimenting, in their municipal services, with several electric cars built by Renault and the Electricite de France-company.

And the 50 or so French owners of Citadine, an experimental electric car made by the Teilhol company, claim their costs are 1-10th the cost they would be for a gasoline-propelled vehicle.

The dozen-odd firms engaged in research have an ardent spokesman in Andre Jarrot, French cabinet minister responsible for the quality of life. Jarrot has for several months been driving one of 10 experimental R5 electric cars built by Reneault and Electricite de France.

The minister likes to point out that, during the Second World War, he perfected an electric tricycle which he used for short trips.

For a country such as France, which must import its petroleum, and for large cities plagued by pollution, electric vehicles hold great promise. Easy to drive, they are quiet, cheap to maintain and non-polluting.

But the vehicles are relatively expensive and can travel only a short distance before their batteries have to be recharged.

The Citadine, the only electric car on the market, is a five-horsepower two-seater with a top speed of 40 miles an hour. Less than seven feet long, its eight 12-volt batteries must be charged for eight hours after about 50 miles.

The Citadine costs about $3,500.

To improve the vehicles, the government plans to increase its yearly research grant from about $1 million to $6 million this year and next.

A study recently submitted to the inter-ministerial committee on nature and the environment suggests 10 per cent of all cars in France could be electrically powered in about 15 years.

To give the vehicles a longer lasting power source, greater speed and more carrying capacity, a 15-year research program is proposed.

Between now and 1982, emphasis would be placed on the construction of utility vehicles such as small trucks and buses. Little change would be made to the present propulsion system, based on lead batteries.

Several thousand such vehicles could be built each year, says the study presented to the government.

From 1982 to 1990, research emphasis would shift to the power source, exploring performance improvements to be found in zinc-nickel batteries or zinc-air generators.

Modified thus, a car such as the Renault could roll 125 miles at slightly less than 60 miles an hour before having to feed its batteries at the plug.

These vehicles, ideal for use as taxis in urban areas, could be sold at the rate of about 10,000 a year, the study forecasts.

After 1990, work would proceed on refining and marketing a motor weighing only one-third as much as the present 600-pound model. The lighter motor would allow greater speed and mileage.

It is thought that numerous nuclear power stations, slated to be built in the 1980s, could provide enough electricity for the nightly recharging of the batteries in the "Kilowatt car."

Firms 'Not Second Class'

TORONTO (CP) — Douglas Marrs, recently-appointed president of Westinghouse Canada Ltd. of Hamilton, takes exception to the attitude that multinational corporations are second-class citizens.

"There is a growing tendency to categorize companies as being Canadian or not Canadian," Marrs said in an interview.

"If you are not, you tend to be suspect. This bothers me a great deal."

Marrs' firm is 76-per-cent owned by Westinghouse Electric Corp. of Pittsburgh, a multinational corporation based in the United States.

"I am a Canadian and have a strong interest in pursuing the objectives Canadians have for achieving independence. Most of our 10,500 employees are Canadian, and we are running a business that in many ways has been of some benefit to the whole country, by and large.

"We don't want to be treated as second-class citizens, and we don't want to be judged rigidly on a monetary base only. Any company should be judged on how it performs and conducts itself in the country, and on how it contributes to the over-all objectives of Canada.

With a continued strong demand for heavy equipment, Westinghouse Canada is budgeting $12 million for capital expenditure this year, compared with $8 million spent in 1974.

Prime Time Prejudice Preys on Innocence

When all day they've run your nerves ragged and pushed your patience to the extreme, there is nothing so satisfying and nothing that induces such peacefulness as the sight of small heads asleep on their pillows.

EXPOSE CHILDREN to native people and they will overcome wrong attitudes picked up from books and movies, says Audrey Sampson, secretary-treasurer of the Tsartlip Indian Band on the Saanich Peninsula. (Max Low photos.)

But then, there's a twitch and a cry and a head lifts and arms reach out. They reach out for comfort, for a hug and for a word that says there is nothing in the room to be afraid of. But you wonder.

And in the morning, not long after dawn, a small girl comes to the table and, in much the same matter-of-fact way she might say "Pass the Rice Krispies", promptly announces: "I [illegible] Indians, dad."

Of course, after choking on your toast, you ask why.

"Because they're bad, they kill people, that's why!" And she takes a large mouthful of Rice Krispies.

Her elder sister comes to the table and says that she, too, has had a bad dream about Indians. It's all a bit much, I mean twice in one morning and when you're not even properly awake.

"We went on a holiday, camping, but we were surrounded by Indians with sticks with fire on them and they killed us all," she explained quite pleasantly. "But then they rode away and we all got up and when the Indians came back we shot them all."

Charming. Straight from the mouths of babes. But someone put the thoughts in there. And later I discovered they had been watching an episode of Bonanza the afternoon before.

"And this man's wife was killed by the Indians," a tear trickles down her cheek as she thinks again of it. "They hit her right in the head with a spear and she died . . . it was so sad." I suspect it was, in fact, an arrow. But she's right, it is sad. And it's sad that this sort of show can be seen during chidren's watching time.

Series like Bonanza were originally conceived as adult fare and were shown during "prime time." But now, Westerns like The Monroes (a bloody series involving Indians and settlers until recently shown regularly on Channel 12), the Virginian, High Chaparal and Bonanza can all be seen by little eyes in the early evening hours.

Bonanza, in fact, is now directly aimed at children, being shown straight after the Brady Bunch at 4:30 p.m. five days a week on Channel 4.

What is shown in films is just the same as you read in history books, says Audrey Sampson, secretary-treasurer of the Tsartlip Indian Band on the Saanich Peninsula. "You never read of Indians doing good; they're always doing bad," says Mrs Sampson.

"The trouble is that so many of the younger kids are not exposed enough to the Indian way of life and only things like demonstrations are blown up on TV," she adds.

Audrey, a mother of five children who, she says, are often called things like "wagon burners", "totem poles" and "cigar-smoking Indians" by their non-native classmates, says the Education Department should hire Indians as resourse people to go around the schools and talk to students about Indian culture and about what Indians are doing today.

"It's a lot harder for an Indian person to go out into a community than for a white person," Mrs. Sampson says. "They are forever being called down and when one Indian makes a mistake, the whole race is generalized."

"The only way children can be helped to overcome the wrong attitudes they learn from books and movies is to expose them to Indian people and show them the beautiful side of Indian life."

I talked as well to Phillip Paul, director of research at the Indian Land Claims Centre on McKenzie Street, and he says "Western" films showing Indians as badmen are "pretty ignorant and are sowing the seeeds of discrimination."

"Of course this is part of the historical problem of the Indian people," Paul added. "They've never been given recognition of anything worthwhile and have always been portrayed as savages. And still today, they aren't considered to have any culture worth preserving."

But Paul blamed the "attitudes of the parents" and said "these movies only portray what the parents feel. Children are impressive and are quick to pick up what their parents feel . . . they know of no other way to look at it."

Dr. Barbara Lane, an anthropologist specializing in the tribal culture of the Indian, is inclined to agree. "You could wipe out TV, you could close down all the channels and it wouldn't make one iota of difference," she says. "We tend to use television as something to blame . . . and then we don't have to look at ourselves. The problems are in the society in which we live."

Is there, then, no hope at all? Is there no hope for people who do care, like the man who told me his four-year-old son came to him one day and said out of the blue "Indians ARE bad aren't they dad?" And is there no hope for the Indians themselves that they will be accepted by society for what they are as individuals and not for what they are portrayed, erroneously, as having been a long time ago?

If there is hope, Phillip Paul doesn't hold much of it.

"Canada claims there is no discrimination," he says, "but there is and there always has been and there always will be until parents, and in fact all people, start changing their attitude."

Young person's dreams are fertile ground for hateful impressions.

Man, 28 Guilty Of Rape

A Supreme Court jury has found Remy Antoine Gatto, 28, guilty of the rape of a 20-year-old Saanich woman and of breaking into her apartment with the intent to commit rape.

The all-male jury delivered their verdict to Mr. Justice John Charles Bouck late Friday afternoon after deliberating four hours.

Bouck remanded Gatto to Jan. 31 when he said, he would hand down sentence, provided a presentence report, requested by defence counsel Harold Turnham, has been completed by then.

Both charges carry a maximum penalty of life in prison.

The courtroom was hushed as the jury foreman read the succinct verdict at 4:25 p.m.

Gatto, an immigrant from France, flushed momentarily then turned white and sat back in the prisoner's box looking straight ahead.

His wife, pregnant with their second child, broke into sobs.

The victim looked relieved and later as she left the courtroom leaned on her boyfriend's arm and sighed "It's over".

The two-day trial heard evidence from the victim who said Gatto burst through a window of her ground floor apartment just minutes after she had gone to bed Sept. 14.

She said Gatto struck her and told her to "shut up" or he'd kill her. He then raped her, she said.

Turnham contended, however, Gatto had stumbled through the window unintentionally and then tried to quieten the victim who was screaming.

Arrest Bares Arsenal

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

One of two young men police arrested Friday for the robbery of a grocery store employee told police he should have killed the victim because "I had a hunch he recognized me."

Victoria police Det. Edward James gave that evidence in provincial court this morning after Robin Wayne De Kelver, 21, of 4126 Birtles and George Earl Storry, 20, of no fixed address pleaded guilty before Judge Edmond St. Jorre to armed robbery of the Warehouse on Thursday.

The pair also pleaded guilty to possession of unregistered restricted weapons — including two 357 Magnum high powered revolvers and two .22 caliber pistols, one with a nine-inch barrel.

James said the weapons were located in a suitcase in the De Kelver residence which police searched at 1:40 p.m. Thursday.

Police also seized a .30 caliber M-1 semi-automatic carbine.

All of the guns were loaded, James said.

Neither De Kelver nor Storry were home at the time. James said they were arrested about an hour later as they returned to the Saanich residence. They offered no resistance.

However, Storry told the arresting officer if police had not got the guns first "I would have taken a few cops with me."

Police recovered $955 from the home and $355 found on De Kelver's possession, money the pair admitted was taken in the robbery of Robert Andrew Arnold, an employee of Wilson's Warehouse Food Market, on Thursday night.

Arnold had just left the store and was carrying a night deposit bag containing, $4,008.95 when he was approached by two men brandishing revolvers and wearing nylon stockings over their heads.

They ordered Arnold to crawl down a bank leading to the waters edge and wait there until they had gone.

James said Storry told police, "I should have killed Arnold . . . I had a hunch he recognized me."

James told the court the pair sorted out the $2,600 cash in bag from the remaining cheques and Chargex slips which they placed back in the bag and threw into the Gorge.

They spent $908 of the take before they were arrested.

James said the four revolvers had been stolen from Walter's Radio and TV in Masset, Queen Charlotte Islands in a break-in Dec. 18.

Eleven hand guns and 1,500 rounds of ammunition were taken in the break-in.

James said about 700 rounds of ammunition were found in the DeKelver house.

Prosecutor Peter Birkett said Storry had a criminal record as a juvenile and DeKelver had convictions in the past two years for driving infractions and possession of a narcotic.

St. Jorre remanded the pair in custody to Feb. 7 for a presentence report and sentencing.

Tank Relocation Threatens Park —Regional Reps

By HUMPHRY DAVY
Times Staff

Two Capital Regional directors today charged Victoria Mayor Peter Pollen with making a last-minute attempt to scuttle a parkland plan in Esquimalt harbor.

Earl Pallister of Langford and Pat Massey of View Royal, said today they strongly opposed Pollen's proposal to relocate Inner Harbor oil tank installations on defence property near historic Fort Rodd Hill.

The area, familiar to many Victorians, is a beautiful wooded area adjacent to the scenic access road to the park.

The surplus DND property involving more than 100 acres is presently being surveyed and is expected to be turned over to the federal parks branch within a month.

Pollen received the backing of Liberal Senator Ray Perrault after viewing the DND property by helicopter a week ago. He said he would try to get Defence Minister James Richardson to support Pollen's proposal.

The mayor said relocation of the tanks would remove an unsightly tank complex in the inner harbor and suggested the site might be used for housing.

"He (Pollen) has thrown a wrench in a Capital Regional Board plan to make the DND property public parkland," said Pallister. "This is a beautiful area."

"In supporting the Pollen proposal, Senator Perrault did not wait to hear the other side of the story. It is unfortunate he did not do so," he added.

PALLISTER
. . . blames Pollen

Pallister said that as long ago as the late 60s, the regional planning board was in favor of the DND property becoming parkland.

Massey suggested that the only reason for proposing relocation of the oil tanks was to remove visual pollution for the hotel complex to be constructed on the Bapco site.

"If you look at the map, you will see that the Bapco site faces the oil tanks," she said. "Most of the other buildings surrounding the harbor are commercial or office buildings."

She said removal of the tanks would not benefit Victoria taxpayers as most are not affected by the sight of the tanks.

"Who is going to pay for the relocation — the people of the capital region?" she asked. "This is a costly project."

Massey said Senator Perrault was "sold a bag of goods."

"I feel sorry for him," she said.

"I was shocked when I heard the mayor's proposal," she said. "I was told the DND land was safe and was going to be turned into parkland."

She also said she didn't put much faith in the mayor's suggestion that the Inner Harbor site could be used for residential.

"I may sound cynical," she added. "But I do recall that when the city expropriated or bought homes on Blanshard, it told the owners the land was wanted for low-cost housing.

"They only used a small section of the land for housing and the remainder for comercial use."

Provincial ecologist Bristol Foster said there is no need to move the tanks.

"This is an expensive proposition," he said. "An imaginative architect could get rid of the so-called eyesore, such as painting the tanks green, and landscaping them with Lombardy poplars.

Jack Rippengale, director of Fort Rodd Hill Historic Park, said it has been the plan of the federal parks branch to acquire sufficient DND land on either side of the access road "to protect for posterity" the scenic access to the park.

He said from the outset all parties agreed in principal to parks branch proposal.

Rippengale admitted he was upset by the mayor's proposal.

"As far as I'm concerned the land will become parkland for the use of the people of Greater Victoria, unless the plan is reversed by those higher up," he said.

Fire Death Accidental

District coroner Edmond St. Jorre has ruled Mrs. Melba Lucille Michaels, 56, died accidentally of asphyxiation when fire broke out in her room in the Drake Hotel Dec. 29.

He said tests showed the victim had a blood alcohol reading of .25 per cent and discounted speculation the woman, who was found collapsed near her bed, had been awakened by the fire and tried to escape.

St. Jorre made the comments after conducting an inquiry into the woman's death.

Mrs. Michaels was the only fatality in the $30,000 fire which sent five of the 35 hotel residents to hospital, four with smoke inhalation, one with a broken ankle received in jumping out of a window.

Firemen believe the fire was caused by careless use of smoking materials. Damage was confined to the area of Mrs. Michaels room and an adjacent second-floor landing.

Drug Programs Shift To Low Key Approach

By SUSAN RUTTAN
Times Staff

Drug education programs in schools don't work.

Most Victoria students and many educators suspected it all along, but now it's been confirmed by a Vancouver study of drug use among high school students.

The study, released this week by the Narcotic Addiction Foundation of B.C., shows students who didn't attend drug education courses were less likely to use drugs than students who did attend the courses.

Not only that, the students who attended the courses knew less about the non-medical use of drugs than students who never attended.

The findings are in line with the low-key approach to the drug problem now being taken by Greater Victoria, Saanich and Sooke school districts.

The trend here is simply to provide counselling for any student who seeks help or information about drugs.

"At one time drug education programs were kind of the thing o do," said Vic Thomson, head of curriculum for Greater Victoria district.

The disrict investigated a number of films about drugs, Thompson said, but it found many of them "pretty sordid and pretty grim."

Students were brought in to view the films before they were released to the schools.

"They laughed at them and ridiculed them so they were never sent out," Thompson said.

He said it's his impression that the drug situation in schools is not as serious as it once was.

"In the last year or so the attitudes in high schools have completely changed," he said and for the better.

Perhaps if you leave these things alone instead of rushing in with "cures" they right themselves in time, Thompson said.

Peter Thomas of Saanich School District said the district has abandoned its old approach of having police come into schools with displays of different drugs and descriptions of their effects.

"All you were doing was appealing to the ones who hadn't tried it yet," he said.

Saanich district has received a $11,055 grant from the Alcohol and Drug Commission to finance a different way of tackling the drug problem.

The district will begin next month a 16-week in-service training program to improve the communication skills of teachers.

The program won't deal directly with drugs, but is aimed at helping teachers to talk more freely with students about problems which may lead students to take drugs.

About 30 elementary and junior high school teachers are expected to take part, each devoting half a day a week to the program.

The Vancouver study showed 71 per cent of students who had attended 11 or more drug education classes had poor knowledge about the non-medical use of drugs.

None had good knowledge about drugs.

Of students tested who had never had a drug education program, 63 per cent were judged to have poor knowledge, 10 per cent to have good knowledge.

Students were asked what they considered the best source of information about non-medical use of drugs.

Of those that named school education programs, 79.9 per cent were judged to have poor knowledge of drugs.

Of those that chose the mass media, only 51.8 per cent were judged to have poor knowledge.

Students who had taken a drug education program in school were asked if they had used drugs in the six months prior to the 1974 survey.

Of those, 22.1 per cent had taken no drugs, not even tobacco or alcohol.

But 26.9 per cent of students who had had no drug education classes said they hadn't used drugs in the last six months.

"Educators should begin to analyse the informational and counselling aspects of their programs as it appears that present programs do not increase knowledgeability or decrease drug use," the researchers advised.

STRIKE DATE SUNDAY

City of Victoria outside workers will set a strike date at a meeting Sunday afternoon, the union spokesman said Friday.

Canadian Union of Public Employees Local 50 president Jim Walker said it will be decided at the meeting whether to walk out Monday or later in the week. "There will be as little warning as possible," he said.

A walkout by the outside workers would bring about a complete shutdown of all municipal services in Greater Victoria.

Municipalities and the Greater Victoria School Board involved in joint negotiations with CUPE locals throughout the area, have promised to lockout all union members if any single CUPE unit strikes.

The CUPE local representing the school board janitors Friday asked Gilmour to withdraw and will be in a walkout position by next Friday, after Gilmour has filed his report with Labor Minister Bill King.

Education Department Seeks UVic Team Aid

The provincial education department says its administration needs help.

Deputy education minister Jack Fleming has asked University of Victoria education dean George Pedersen to analyse the department and recommend changes.

Pedersen will work with three other UVic professors with experience in the same field.

"Essentially what he's asked us to do is an analysis of the organizational structure of the department of education," Pedersen said Friday.

Fleming specifically wants the group "to tell him where research and development should fit in," said the dean.

PEDERSEN
. . . heads study

The department's research and development division has been in turmoil since the firing of division head Dr. Stanley Knight last week.

Fleming has extended the probation of all division employees indefinitely, says one research officer. Maureen Stirling, has quit because of the problems.

The three UVic professors who will assist Pedersen are Chris Hodgkinson, Arthur Kratzmann and Alex Bavelas.

The consultants may look at organizations outsiqe the education department to compare administrative policy, said Pedersen.

The Times Ask

'Q: When I wash my cast iron frying pans, the paper towel is always left black. Why? Is it still safe to use the pans? — C.W.R.

A: It's just part of the finish coming off, and no danger is involved. But for longer wear and better use, avoid washing the pans whenever possible. If you are using grease in them as you should be, nothing should seick and a wiping with paper is sufficient cleaning.

B.C. Lures Archeologists

By ELEANOR BOYLE
Times Staff

When Canada's provincial archeologists met together for the first time they came to B.C. because this province leads in the field of historical site preservation, according to Bjorn Simonsen.

Simonsen, provincial archeologist for B.C., met with his counterparts across the country for two days this week in Victoria.

Preservation of history is becoming more popular across the country, he said in an interview after the closed conference.

"The public demands it. People are interested in their own heritage."

When the Archeological and Historic Sites Protection Act was passed in 1960, B.C. became unique across the country with such protective legislation, he said.

The bill was amended in 1972.

"Most provinces now have legislation (regulating retrieval and use of historical materials found)," said Simonsen.

But all governments are still in the early stages of managing such materials, he said, and representatives discussed policy during the conference, held at the legislative buildings.

"We were talking about archeological resource management in all of the provinces," said Simonsen.—Every province except Quebec and Prince Edward Island had a delegate, as did some federal government organizations such as the National Museum.

Attempting to set down a management model on paper, the scientists agreed on some requirments for "an ideal archeological program," he said.

Adequate funds must be available both for field work and follow-up as a basic requirement, he said.

"That's been a problem in B.C. There's been lots of excavation but few reports published."

Excavators have too often ignored the "real responsibility" they have to record information for their colleagues and the public, he said, adding that lack of money has partly been the problem.

Financial restrictions have eased at least on paper for Simonsen's office during its three-year life. Starting with an operating budget of $15,000 in 1971, the office was given $110,000 this year along with $200,000 for summer student programs and $150,000 from B.C. Hydro and the department of highways, he said.

Supplying the provincial archeologist's office with construction proposals years in advance, the company and the department pay for investigation of construction areas for sites o fhistorical significance.

Roads around the province have been detoured and building delayed in the last few years after the finding of artifacts on rights-of-way, said Simonsen.

To what point should projects, often multi-million dollar ones, be delayed or halted altogether merely for the sake of history?

"That's something we discussed a lot," he said. "It depends how important the site is.

"The answer has to be based on what that site can yeild as far as information."

The catch to that theory, however, is that no one can tell how important a site is until tests excavations are conducted, often holding up a project meanwhile, he said.

Though the conference was the first of provincial representatives, members of the Canadian Archelogical Association meet yearly to talk about matters that are largely academic.

Provincial archeologists will meet for the second time after the Association's next gathering in March, 1975, said Simonsen.

He hopes this week's conference will become an annual event.

PSYCHOLOGIST HERE

Internationally-noted psychologist Robert Ornstein will give two public lectures at the University of Victoria next Thursday and Friday, Jan. 30 and 31.

Ornstein is currently working out of the Langley-Porter Neuropsychology Institute in San Fransisco and has authored books which include The Psychology of Time and The Psychology of Consciousness.

UVic psychology professor David Walker calls Ornstein "at least as important as R. D. Laing."

Laing, an acclaimed sociologist, spoke to Victoria audiences last year.

One of Ornstein's major theories is that "how you feel is as valid as how you think, said Walker.

Ornstein says the left side of a Westerners brain is involved in linear and logical thinking while the right side handles intuitive thoughts.

He contends both ways of thought are equally valid because an entire side of the brain is devoted to each.

"That gives you and me and Joe Blow just one more bit of freedom," said Walker.

The theory implies that feelings about a subject are as valid as logical deductions, said the UVic professor.

"It says the (opinion of the) expert is not necessarily true. And it extends to the political sphere. The reason we're not in a democracy is the average guy thinks he has nothing to say. But we must have free people willing to vote how they feel, not how someone (an expert) tells them to vote," said Walker.

Ornstein's two lectures will be entitled Two Modes of Consciousness and The Psychology of Consciousness.

Thursday's lecture is scheduled for 8 p.m. in UVic's Elliott 168. Friday's lecture will be at 12:30 p.m. in Cornett 265.

Sponsoring the talks are the University Lectures Series Committee and the overseas organization The Institute for Cultural Research.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A young Victoria man, sentenced last December to nine months in jail for possession of heroin, appeared before Judge William Ostler in provincial court Friday and asked for immediate sentences on two other matters before the court.

Douglas Robert Andrews had earlier pleaded not guilty to wilful damage and intimidation laid following an incident at a Victoria residence last March 28.

A trail had been set for March 5, but Andrews said he wanted to plead guilty to the charges now so he could dispose of the matter and clear the way for him to enter a work-release program.

Prosecutor Peter Birkett said a Victoria man had charged Andrews with mischief and the accused went to the man's house to try to get him to drop the charge. "I will kill you if you don't," he is reported to have said. Defence said Andrews was drunk at the time.

Since then the accused and plaintiff have patched up their differences, defence counsel pointed out.

The crown was asked whether it would dismiss the case; and Birkett said no.

"I agree with the prosecutor," Ostler said. "The accused, even though he may have been drunk, did what I consider extremely serious . . . the attempt by anyone to intimidate another in order to thwart justice."

He fined Andrews $200 but gave him nine months to pay.

"I don't know how you can live in harmony with your surroundings when you have stolen paintings looking down at you," Ostler said to 46-year-old James Scott Scullion.

Scullion, 1210 Balmoral, pleaded guilty to two counts of theft under $200.

The crown alleged Scullion stole a photographic reproduction of a painting from the apartment of Ian McDonald, 1720 Richmond Road on Sept. 19. The reproduction was valued at $80.

On Jan. 1, Scullion visited the same friend and removed a $40 reproduction from the wall.

Police searched Scullion's home on Thursday. The $80 painting was found hanging on the wall; the $40 painting was located under the bed.

Ostler set a fine of $500.

Janis Anne Parsons, 26, of 3005 Tillicum Road, was fined $200 after pleading guilty to shoplifting a $4.50 keycase from Simpsons-Sears Ltd. Thursday.

Gordon Daniel Mazzei, 20 of 504 Selkirk was fined $100 and placed on four months probation for theft under $200.

Police said Mazzei pumped $10.05 worth of gas from a service station at 2670 Douglas, Dec. 27 and drove off without paying. He pleaded guilty.

A 25-year-old woman was sentenced to six months in jail and given two years probation for fraud, false pretence, uttering and failing to appear incourt.

Sandra Lorraine Callioux, address not known, pleaded guilty to the charges stemming from her receiving $1,261 from the human resources department to which she was not entitled.

Birkett noted Callioux has been in custody for the past six weeks, during which time "she has shown a high degree of honesty."

In arriving at the sentence, Ostler said, "I have considered a lengthy sentence but I have also considered her time in custody."

He said Callioux "has developed a penitent attitude . . . and rather than giving her a lengthy sentence I have decided to give her a shorter sentence and a lengthy probation period.

A 19-year-old man was fined $500 by Judge W. L. Ostler in Victoria Provincial Court Friday after pleading guilty to a charge of impaired driving and escape from lawful custody.

Escorted to the city police station after being placed under arrest for impaired driving early Friday, Lawrence Albert Carlow, 619 Dunedin, ran from the police, down the hallway of the station, toward the police parking compound. Carlow did not make it to the parking lot; he was apprehended in the hall.

Frank Ernest Lane, 55, of R.R. No. 1 East Sooke pleaded guilty to impaired driving and refusing to undergo a breath test.

The crown alleged Lane had two previous convictions for impaired driving.

He was sentenced to four months in jail and prohibited to drive for 18 months.

* * *

Twenty-two-year-old Jeffrey Mair, no fixed address, sentenced last Dec. 6 to two years less a day for breaking and entering was back in court Friday, this time pleading guilty to carrying a firearm without a permit, driving without insurance, driving without licence plates and misusing licence plates.

Mair was charged Dec. 5 after making an illegal turn at Hillside and Fifth.

Ostler sentenced him to one month, the term to run at the same time as his current sentence.

A Winchester shotgun which police found on the back seat of his car was confiscated to the crown.

Douglas Stanley Halstead, 22, was ordered to stand trial in higher court following a preliminary hearing before Ostler.

Halstead is charged with extortion, abduction, and car theft. The charges stem from an incident Nov. 12 when a Victoria car salesman was forced to accompany a man on a ferry trip to Tsawwassen.

Larry Michael Flatman, 24, of 1224 Oxford was given a suspended sentence and placed on six months probation after he was found guilty of possessing a small amount of cocaine Sept. 30 in Bastion Square.

Symphony in Schools

Secondary schools in the area continue to enjoy in-school concerts by Victoria Symphony Orchestra in the second half of the current season.

This week the orchestra gave concerts in Shoreline and High Rock secondary schools and on Feb. 6 it will be playing at Cedar Hill and Lansdowne.

These concerts have been made possible by a grant from the Music Performance Trust Funds administered through the musicians' union and made available with the co-operation of Victoria Musicians' Association, Local 247.

On Feb. 13 Laszlo Gati and the orchestra will give a concert at St. Peter's Church in Nanaimo, made possible by an assisting grant from the Vancouver Foundation.

IBM Wins Suit Reversal

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A $259.5 million damages award against International Business Machines Corp. the largest civil judgment ever entered in U.S. court—was set aside Friday by the Tenth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver.

The appeals court ruled that Telex Corp., the small competitor that had won the massive award in an Oklahoma federal court, must pay IBM $18.5 million on IBM's counterclaim that Telex had stolen the computer giant's trade secrets.

Telex, a Tulsa-based supplier in the computer industry, had prevailed in the lower court on its charges that IBM tried to lock it out of a significant portion of the computer business—the furnishing of electronic equipment compatible with IBM's machines.

U.S. District Judge A. Sherman Christensen found that IBM held a dominant market position and had abused that position with "sophisticated" rather than "nakedly aggressive" techniques to the detriment of Telex.

The circuit court, saying a fuller explanation would follow in a written opinion, announced in a brief unsigned order that Judge Christensen was being reversed because Telex had failed to prove the use of predatory tactics in a relevant economic market.

What am I?

I cannot be seen. Many times I go completely unrecognized—particularly in the very young. Because of me, children fail to learn and their speech will never be normal. They are labeled stubborn. Deficient. Or even retarded. Yet they are none of these.

I make the elderly suffer. When I strike, they often cut themselves off from family and friends. They feel misunderstood. And they know the heartbreak of loneliness.

In all, I rob more than 1.5 million Canadians of much that is good in life. I undermine their confidence and eat away at their social life.

I am equally hard on the rich and poor. I cause trouble on the job and in the home. Yet, in spite of this, few of those I attack do anything to fight me, because no one wants to admit I exist.

I am a hearing problem.

Early detection is important. Call for a Free Electronic Hearing Test now.
